

LETTER FROM OUR LEADERSHIP

The communities we serve in the Twin Cities face many, complex and interconnected challenges, from health disparities to gaps in educational achievement. For all of our accomplishments, we have a long way to go to erase these issues. The truth is, simply expanding existing programs or adding personnel doesn't create the thriving communities we want. To be effective, we must invest in innovations in how we work as well as what we do.

In 2014, Pillsbury United Communities disrupted business as usual to do just that.

We focused inward to radically rethink how we develop and deliver our services. At the center of that quest is our Strategic Framework, titled One Pillsbury, United. This document is the cornerstone for an organization-wide effort to become smarter, more unified, and more innovative in our approach. Built around the goal that solutions must match the complex barriers people face, the framework outlines how we will build our capacity and leadership, reflect and make assessments along the way to continue to meet the community's ever-changing needs.

Chanda Smith Baker,
President and Chief Executive Officer

One Pillsbury, United is coming to life in many ways. We are looking at challenges broadly, in the context of people's whole lives, and creating integrated solutions that reflect that complexity.

And we are doubling our focus on outcomes: ensuring everything we do has a measurable impact.

We challenged ourselves to think and work differently — continually redefining social services in step with the needs in our communities. Most importantly, we are really listening to people in our communities, responding to their shifting needs, and working to deconstruct the systemic issues they face.

This is what we call disruptive thinking. It's how good becomes excellent and how excellent becomes permanent.

Thank you for your trust, your confidence, and above all, your partnership. Your investment extends far into the community creating opportunity and growth. With your help, we are leading change in our communities from the inside out.

REIMAGINING COMMUNITY WELLNESS

Because health and wellness lie at the intersection of many community disparities

Annual Report
2014

How do you tackle health issues on a neighborhood scale?

Nutritious food and opportunities for exercise are hard to come by in Minneapolis's Phillips neighborhood — with serious consequences for residents' long-term wellbeing. That's why PUC created the Phillips Community Healthy Living Initiative, a multi-sector collaboration that puts healthier choices within reach and empowers people to use them. We're partnering with supermarkets, farmers markets, food shelves and backyard gardeners to get fresh food into the hands of those who need it. Meanwhile, we're sponsoring engaging physical activities for all ages — from walking clubs to cardio classes to pickup basketball. The initiative also expands access to garden space, so residents can grow their own nourishing food close to home. By weaving wellness into the community fabric, PUC is making the healthy choice the easy choice.

11,524

YOUTH AND FAMILIES

created connections to people in their neighborhood increasing knowledge of the issues and assets relevant to their lives.

“I gained a new perspective on parenting...I can share my story, my failures, my pain and we can all learn from each other.”

BREAKING DOWN WALLS

So that families can achieve the life they envision and thrive in their community

How do you disrupt isolation to bring families together?

Raising school-aged children isn't easy. But it's especially tough for parents short on time and resources to devote to their kids' academic, social and emotional needs. PUC's solution: create spaces and opportunities for families to conveniently engage with each other and access helpful resources. Our innovative Parent Network operates in and around our community centers to offer families an array of lively enrichment activities. Those include nightly family meals, movie screenings and discussions, service learning opportunities, parent support groups, and workshops to address critical needs like workforce readiness and financial literacy. Created and evaluated by parents, PUC's Parent Network is giving families a place to rally around what matters most: their children's wellbeing.

UPENDING PROGRAMS

To be more integrated and inclusive for the communities they serve

How do you intercept risk factors before they become reality?

Minneapolis's East African community is at special risk for heart disease and diet-related illness, due in part to cultural barriers and limited resources. As part of Minnesota's "Eliminating Health Disparities Initiative," Pillsbury United Communities is heading off the challenge before it becomes a crisis. This integrated program delivers health education and preventive healthcare to East African immigrants through partners and assets already trusted by the community. Our efforts include food education tools in Somali and Oromo languages created in partnership with local mosques, new heart-healthy menu options introduced at popular East African restaurants, and dedicated spaces for physical activity right in the neighborhood. The culturally relevant approach is making a healthy difference where other efforts have struggled.

21,549

accessed resources promoting health equity through nutritious food options, education, assistance navigating healthcare system and social connections.

“There are too many fast food and low-quality fried food restaurants. We have to go out of the area to get nutritious food.”

13,896

PEOPLE

in their neighborhoods created connections through community convenings, engaging art projects, and reinvestment of resources into community enterprises.

RETHINKING PARTNERSHIPS

Annual Report
2014

To help individuals and families access resources they need beyond our doors

How do you address the food desert in North Minneapolis?

The 67,000 residents of North Minneapolis are served by 30 corner convenience stores and only one supermarket. The lack of nutritious food here is linked to high rates of obesity and other serious health problems. So Pillsbury United Communities is spearheading a homegrown solution to close the gap. “North Market” is a unique social enterprise that unites affordable and nutritious food, health care services, and wellness education in one place. We are leading this initiative with support from robust cross-sector partnerships in the healthcare, grocery, real-estate and nonprofit sectors. More than a grocery store, North Market is a hub for community health, staffed with health care professionals and nutrition experts who offer hands-on guidance where it can do the most good. On track to open in 2017, North Market will make good food a staple of the neighborhood, while feeding the community’s social and economic health.
