DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

When Luke Baines called to ask if I wanted to write a horror screenplay with him in the early days of lockdown, I immediately said yes. My first thought was that we should not only write the script, but also figure out a way to make it ourselves at the same time.

Luke and I somehow found immediate inspiration considering the dire circumstances in the outside world. We wrote what we knew (as they say) - Luke bringing his experience as an actor and me bringing what I've learned writing in the horror genre. It seemed to flow so harmoniously that the feature-length script was completed in a matter of weeks. The idea for the film was born out of an interest in the process actors go through - contrary to what the script might make you think, I actually love actors so much. It always blows my mind to watch actors put themselves on the line to reach new levels of raw exposure - especially when the circumstances around them are completely surreal and sometimes ridiculous - and this film is no different.

This movie is all about having fun, for the actors and the audience. On the surface, "Untitled Horror Movie" is the unlikely pairing of "Best In Show", "Scream" and "Searching" mixed with a splash of "Community". Part ghost movie, part self aware comedy, part deranged Gen-Z satire — with the teaming of six amazing actors that all stem from different backgrounds. Not only are these actors performing in this film, they are the cinematographers, the gaffers, the make up artists, and their own boom operators.

Dig deeper and you'll discover this film is also a warped love letter to the comedy/horror genre. Dig even deeper and you will find a satirical, post-modern take on the state of self-importance in society. It's funny, it's scary, it's subversive. In other words — the exact film we need right now.

I sincerely hope you enjoy the endless amounts of hard work and love for this business that went into this picture as much as I do.

-Nick Simon

UNTITLED HORROR MOVIE Fan Distribution

Untitled Horror Movie was conceived for the fans, with the movie being distributed directly to the fans. The fan-direct distribution and marketing campaign will mobilize a global fanbase of over 24 million fans, with the ability for them to buy into a world-first global livestream movie premiere special event.

The movie will premiere to a global audience on June 12 via the livestream platform Maestro, following in the footsteps of tastemakers such as Coachella and Balenciaga, Katy Perry and Billie Eilish. The film will be released globally on home entertainment from June 15.

The producers have resisted the normal route to market via a sales agent and a spread of international distributors to sell the film. They have held back all the global rights to the film enabling them to independently produce the global premiere livestream event - not only selling tickets directly to fans but also taking advantage of the halo marketing effect of the livestream as they intend to sell the film 3 days later on home entertainment platforms like Amazon and iTunes.

Producer Bronwyn Cornelius says “It’s exhilarating to have the filmmaking team directly involved in the overall distribution and marketing strategy with our partner, Yet Another Distribution Company. The social media insights and support of the main six actors gives us a great road map as to the international territories that are relevant for distribution to the 24 million fan base, enabling us to directly target our release plan, as well as simultaneously release the film worldwide.” Fellow producer Marina Stabile added, “By marketing directly to the fans, we are able to avoid the traditional sales agent expenses and large costs associated with a theatrical release. Plus, distributing on home entertainment platforms a couple days after the global virtual cinema livestream also gives us a direct revenue share with the platforms. We hope this innovative approach will prove highly successful and help empower independent filmmakers in the future.”
