

Earth is succumbing to catastrophic climate change.
You have 2 minutes to choose between two host planets.

PLANET A Has a culture of lacto-ovo vegetarianism.
 They do not use animals for meat, however once their cows and hens become less profitable for milk, or egg production, they are slaughtered and replaced.

PLANET B Has a culture of complete vegetarianism otherwise known as veganism.
 They do not use animals for meat, eggs, milk or other purposes.
There are no slaughterhouses on planet B.

If you find yourself starving to death on a desert island with the choice between eating a pig and eating a human -Don't kill anyone just yet.

Take a moment.

Are you really in one of those desert island survival situations or are you seeking to justify flesh eating under circumstances where there is no genuine case for necessity?

After pursuing an animal through the forest the experienced hunter can tell when the animal is ready to give herself to him. Unfortunately it can be difficult to know whether the animal has given up through sheer exhaustion or whether she has genuinely come to terms with her imminent death.

Organic meat cost me twice as much as woollies meat I sure hope the animals are grateful.

Casomorphin is an opioid released during the digestion of cow's milk that helps baby calves stay close to mamma. Unlike baby calves, humans have developed refrigerators and no longer need to follow cows about to get their casomorphin fix.

DNA sequencing shows that eggs contain animal, not vegetable protein.

Once hens become less profitable for egg production (usually around 18 months old) they are slaughtered and replaced

-so why are eggs considered to be a vegetarian food?

The calf needs to suckle milk.

The farmer wants to sell it.

The farmer has a sharp knife and a captive bolt gun.

The calf has wobbly legs and wide set innocent eyes.

We get the milk and the calf gets slaughtered.

Is beating a dog an act of violence?
How about slitting the throat of a pig?
How do you feel about violence towards animals?
Do you eat dead animal body parts?

Vegetarians with their vested interests find it difficult to accept plant sentience.
So it is up to the meat eaters of this world to rationally investigate screaming watermelons.

Peace and love
that's all good.
Be kind to each other, the earth and so forth.
Please don't forget about the animals.
They are fellow beings, not commodities.
Go vegan.
