Student: Could you give me an idea about biotechnology, please?

Teacher: Yes, of course. Biotechnology (or bioengineering) refers to any change of an organism's genes for practical purposes like disease control, better crops, cloning of plants and animals, ... Biotechnology is closely related to genetics which can be defined as the scientific study of genes, i.e. variations in the characteristics – resemblances and differences – of organisms and how these characteristics are inherited from generation to generation. Modern genetics is as much concerned with the organism level of this process as it is with cellular and molecular levels.

Thanks to biotechnology, farmers are able to get rid of unwanted characteristics of plants and keep the ones that they desire. One example of these is the new type of potatoes that resist invasion by dangerous insects.

Advances in genetic engineering have made it possible to decrease the need for fertilizers by breeding plants that produce their own form of efficient fertilizers... However, there are some negative side effects that must be worked out. An example of this, is a decline in the quality of taste, which would definitely outweigh the benefits of a long shelf life or resistance to insects!

Student: Is it used to control some of the human diseases?

Teacher: Yes. The use of genetic engineering in humans promises some extraordinary benefits, one of which is cure and prevention of many types of diseases that come from faulty genes.

Student: Thank you very much, sir.

Teacher: Not at all.
