A Culture Shock

- 1 As soon as she landed in Boston, Tamara Blackmore could feel the tension in the air. She was about to taste a lifestyle far more hectic than the one she left. "Driving in Boston is crazy," says Blackmore. "It took me a while to get used to the roads and the driving style here. I was always afraid someone was going to hit me. It was particularly tricky since the steering wheel was on the wrong side of the car. In Australia, it's on the right side." Beyond the cars and traffic jams, Blackmore said it took a while to get used to so many people in one place, all of whom seemed like they were moving at high speed.
- 2 "There are only 18 million people in Australia spread out over an entire country," she says, "compared to more than six million people in the state of Massachusetts alone. We don't have the kind of congestion you have in Boston. There is a whole different perception of space."
- 3 The pressing problem for Blackmore was making a quick adjustment to the American lifestyle which she felt as if it was run by a stopwatch. For this easy going Australian, Americans seemed like perpetual-motion machines. "Americans are very time-oriented," Blackmore says. "Everything is done according to a schedule. They are always busy, which made me feel guilty about wanting to just hang around and occasionally watch television."
- 4 It didn't take Blackmore long to adjust to the American rhythm. "I felt the pressure to work harder and do more because everyone was running around doing so much," she says. When BC students weren't huddled over books, Blackmore found it weird that they were compulsively jogging, running, biking, or doing aerobics in order to be thin.
- 5 But it's Boston College's relaxed and friendly learning environment that sets it apart from her Melbourne college experience. "Generally speaking, learning facilities are a lot better in Boston," she says. "In Australia, students and teachers have little contact outside the classroom. It's a formal and depersonalized relationship." It's just the opposite at BC, according to Blackmore. "BC and faculty students are like one big happy family," she says. "There is a real sense of team spirit." Another pleasant shock was the close and open relationship American students enjoy with their teachers. It's a sharp contrast to Australia, where college students keep a discreet but respectful distance from their tutors.
