

- 1 A few years ago, the Entraide Nationale, the National Federation of Charity Associations (FNAB) and the ALEF project of the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) established boarding schools to enable girls from the most isolated places in the Kingdom to achieve educational success. The idea is to provide lodging, educational support and a psychosocial enrichment programme specially designed for girls from faraway areas so that they can complete their studies beyond primary school and free themselves from marginalization and illiteracy.
- 2 Entraide Nationale Director, Mohamed Talbi, said Dar Taliba has proven itself to be "a successful model, aimed at encouraging girls' personal and social development". These girls, who never dreamed they would one day be able to continue their studies right to the end, now hold a different vision of their own future. They have new-found confidence in their abilities, display great ambition, and dream of conquering the work market in the years to come. Gone are the days when they could only see their futures in terms of marriage.
- 3 Sara, a 15-year-old teenager, freely admits that without Dar Taliba she would have had to abandon school long ago. The same goes for little Khadija, who, thanks to the help given by Dar Taliba, has been able to improve her educational level and thus guarantee her success.
- 4 Amina, 14, is not shy any more and can now express herself with great ease. "I've learned that a human being is worth nothing without education and without culture," she says. "My parents decided to support me, having seen the change in my personality, although at the start they had intended to marry me off. Unfortunately, that's not the case for other girls," she added.
- 5 Observers attribute the success of the Dar Taliba model to more than location and talented teachers. Psychosocial enrichment and extracurricular activities are also important to change the girls' attitudes and, therefore, setting these boarding schools apart from other institutions, explains Aziza Hmamouchi, the director of ALEF's educational component.
- 6 Government surveys show that the programme is working: the school dropout rate in these establishments is less than 1%. The general pass rate for Dar Taliba students has almost doubled, from 43% in 2005-2006 to 84% in 2007-2008. When the Dar Taliba initiative began, educators had to invest an immense effort to get the project off the ground and to convince parents to send their daughters away from home to pursue their education. But three years on, these boarding houses have earned themselves a good reputation among the population.
