The time has come again. The biggest party of the year will take over New York City. Thousands of revelers don all white outfits and haul folding tables, chairs, decor, and picnic baskets to a secret location. Once they arrive, they'll set up, sip wine and champagne, eat delicious food, and dance the night away. Afterward, they'll pick up every last bit of evidence that there was ever a party at all, before they make their way back to their New York apartments. This extravagant event is no ordinary night out in NYC. This is the party that so many New Yorkers wish to attend. It's "Le Dîner en Blanc."

The pop-up gathering, which began as a dinner with friends in Paris more than 25 years ago, had its US launch in 2011, in, you guessed it — New York City. Since then, the worldwide event has grown to include 70 cities. I attended as a guest in 2013, and this year, I'll attend as a member of the press for the first time.

If you haven't heard of Le Dîner en Blanc or seen what transpires at this epic shindig, watch the video below of last year's party at Hudson River Park.

Looks like great fun, doesn't it? You might recognize celeb chef Todd English in the video. He'll be back at DEB this year to curate special plates (yum), Apothic will provide white wine, and Moët & Chandon will be the official champagne of the event!

If you're interested in attending Le Dîner en Blanc 2016 in NYC, you'll need someone to sponsor you, or you can join the wait list.
