It’s Always Something. That’s Why There’s Federation.

Through our Annual Campaign, the Jewish Federation of Greater Charlotte joins with 153 Federations across North America to answer the needs of the Jewish world.

When a child needs a Jewish education, a subsidy to participate in a Jewish experience like Jewish summer camp or a BBYO leadership conference, Federation is there. When a family loses its income or an entire community is devastated by a disaster, Federation is there. It’s a pledge we live by.

We are there to help a distressed family regain its footing; to rescue and rebuild after a catastrophe. We make sure a Holocaust survivor isn’t deserted, and that no one who is disabled is without assistance. Federation holds out a safety net. And we’ll never let it fail.

The Jewish Federation of Greater Charlotte has been supporting, sustaining and revitalizing Jewish life for more than 75 years. Today our work is far from finished – and we need your support to meet our 2017 Campaign Goal of $3,750,000...much more.

Nevertheless, She Persisted: The Story of Avital Sharansky

By Inbal Ozeri, Israeli Shlichah

This month I would like to share some bio of a very special person, she is very humble and you may not heard of her. When she needed to, she was the biggest shout-out and the bravest person who fought without shyness or shame in order to talk to the most important people in the world and to ask of them what she needed.

Thanks to her we have had a lot of things happening and moving, but the latest thanks I have for her is – without you, Avital, I would not have been here.

A Shlichah that got here thanks to the Jewish Agency and its executive, chairman, Natan Sharan-sky, who would not be there today if not for his amazing wife – Avi-tal.

Avital Sharansky was born with the name Natalya Shteiglitz in 1978 on multiple crimes (including treason, which carried the death penalty). From the Lefortovo Prison in Moscow, Anatoly was sentenced to hard labor and – after his arrest and exile to the USSR. Nevertheless, She Persisted: The Story of Avital Sharansky Avital campaigned for his right to immigrate to Israel, and – after his arrest and exile to Siberia – for his freedom. Anatoly was arrested on March 15, 1977 and transported to a demonstration near the Moscow Synagogue in autumn 1973 (during the Yom Kippur War) and been in jail. Anatoly was finally released in February 11, 1986, and transported the following day to what was then East Germany (Berlin), where Avital met him as he came across the bridge. They both flew home to Israel and thousands of waiting welcomers.

Ida Milgrom and her other son, Leonid, subsequently received visas to join her son and daughter-in-law in Israel, where she lived in Jerusalem, until her death at age 94 (May 2002). So that’s a short version of her amazing story.

A HEIGHTENED LEVEL OF COMMITMENT
JPS, Forever in Our Hearts

By Karen Barrett

In 2009, my husband and I had begun researching local preschools. Preschool is the foundation for a child’s education and there just didn’t seem to be the right fit out there for us.

Then, on the recommendation of a colleague and friend whose children had attended the school, we walked through the doors of The Jewish Preschool on Sardis (JPS). There we met the teachers, saw children playing, learning and having fun together and my husband and I just looked at each other and with-out saying a word, knew that we had found our preschool. It had already checked all of the boxes on paper (5-STAR rating, teachers with degrees in Early Childhood Education, a low teacher-child ratio) but we both had that feeling when you just know that something is right. We filled out our paperwork to ensure that our daughter could enter the 2s class in the fall of 2010. Almost a year early because we were sure.

We watched our daughter grow from a timid toddler to a confident little girl, who proudly lit the Menorah, could say all of the blessings, and loved her Friday challah. Her little sister spent her infant years in the Baby Bjorn going into the classroom for drop-off and pickup. Soon, she was joined by a little brother (there was even a sign outside of the classroom saying, “Mazel Tov on becoming a big sister!”). Pick-up and drop-off time now involved a double stroller, with both younger siblings waiting for it to be their turn. I laughed when I think of our oldest daughter starting preschool and the tears at drop-off until she got used to the routine of leaving her mom and dad. Fast-forward to the middle sister and little brother who were thrilled when they got to (finally!) join in on the fun. No adjustment time needed there because JPS had become an extension of their home.

We’ve always had at least one child at JPS since 2010 and this year, 2017, marks our graduation from preschool. Each of our children has had three wonderful years at the school where they developed a love of learning and of Judaism. Our oldest daughter wanted the Rebecca American Girl Doll because “she’s Jewish like me.” Our kids ask to have Shabbat dinner together. Our son’s first word was “challah” and his favorite food is matzah ball soup.

I will always fondly remember walking my children to and from the classroom and seeing the friendly, smiling faces of our JPS family, the parents, the children and the staff. I’ve felt so connected and passionate about the school that I served on the board for over five years. I’ll remember Matzah and Mitzvot with Mom, Dreidels with Dad, Grandparents Day, celebrating Hebrew birthdays and weekly Shabbat sing-alongs with Ms. Patty, where families are welcome to join their children. My girls love coming back to JPS on days off, to hug their old teachers, read to the class and go back to the playground.

Being a part of the JPS community over the past seven years, I have seen it evolve and adjust to meet the needs of families. They are the only provider of infant care in a Jewish environment. Children can choose from fall, winter, and spring after-school enrichment programs, like Soccer Shots, Taekwondo, Cooking, Science, Art, and Zumba. They offer a full day for working parents, weekly summer camps, and a full summer program. It’s such a great feeling to know how comfortable and happy your children are at their school and how much they are cared for and loved.

I’ve met friends through the school that I now consider to be family. My children were more than prepared for the rigors of today’s kindergarten. They are proud to be Jewish. And I hope that even next year, when we have moved on to our next chapter, our children will always sing the JPS “theme song” as loud and proud as they do today: JPS kids say, hooray! Laugh and play with friends all day.

We can’t wait to go to school JPS. Is. Cool. Thank you, JPS, for such a wonderful preschool experience for our family. Ms. Dedee, Ms. Leah, Ms. Lisa, Ms. Beverly, Ms. Elizabeth, Morah Jayme, Ms. Wanda, Ms. Kate, Ms. Jennifer, Ms. Ellen, Ms. Angel, and Ms. Patty—the Barrett family loves and appreciates you all. ☺

Caring For Caregivers

By Howard Olshansky, Executive Director, Jewish Family Services

Recently my sister and mother visited from Philadelphia. My mother will be 89 this month and while she often spends time at my sister’s she still lives independently. And although she has some short-term memory issues, she is as alert as I am, plays Mah Jongg a couple of times a week, showers and brushes her teeth every day, frequently walks to the store for groceries, and on all fronts appears to be completely self-sufficient. But as my sister and I were talking, the conversation was around the fact that she is 89. She often loses things like her keys or her wallet. She is at risk for falling (this has already happened). She sometimes forgets to pay a bill or two and we are never totally sure if she remembers to take all of her medications. We worry about her being alone … what if something happens? We talked about home care support but she would never let someone into her home. In her mind, she doesn’t need any help. After all she is an adult, not a child. But as her children, how do we balance wanting her to maintain her independence as much as possible and yet ensure she remains safe.

At Jewish Family Services, we hear these issues every day from folks caring for or concerned about their senior parent(s). At two recently held caregiver focus groups, we heard about the diversity of challenges trying to manage the issues of aging parents, spouses, or disabled children whether living with them, living independently, or in senior facilities. The physical and emotional strain of being a caregiver can be overwhelming. I can’t tell you how many times I hear, “I don’t have a life anymore. If I only had just one hour to myself.”

Some folks don’t even realize the stress they are experiencing. They wouldn’t identify as a caregiver and if asked they would tell you they are just doing what they need to do for their loved one. However, when looked at closely it becomes easy to see the impact of these responsibilities on them and their families. If any of this sounds familiar, JFS is available to help. As a component of our Senior Outreach services, we not only reach out to you they are just doing what they need to do for their loved one. However, when looked at closely it becomes easy to see the impact of these responsibilities on them and their families.

Annual J Street Conference

J Street’s mission is to be “the political home for pro-Israel, pro­peace Americans who want Israel to be secure, democratic and the national home of the Jewish people.” This year’s J Street conference took place in Washington, DC in late February. The six delegations from Charlotte had different reasons for attending and came away with a range of conclusions, not all in agreement. J Street believes that this robust and honest conversation about the Israeli­Palestinian conflict and what it means to be pro­Israel is important.

Shelly Fasciana

I was overwhelmed at the J Street conference by the outpouring of love for Israel as a peaceful, secure, and thriving homeland for the Jewish people. I was also struck by the deep level of conversation, impressive credentials of the panelists, and diversity in leadership. I left feeling more connected to Israel and more educated on the religious and political complexities. I have gained respect for the passionate leaders of J Street for their tireless efforts advocating for Israel as a secure and democratic Jewish homeland.

Steve and Penni Powell

This was our first conference and we were very impressed by its organization, the speakers, and the willingness to address controversial topics head­on. We learned about the historical origins of the Israeli­Palestinian conflict and the current political environment and cultural tensions in Israel. We went to express our support for Israel and peace and a two­state solution. It was thrilling for us to see the heartfelt expression of support for Israel and the peace process by thousands of Jewish young adults from colleges and universities all over America. Their enthusiasm was infectious and bolstered our faith in the future of Jews and Judaism.

Denise Finck­Rothman

I am very concerned about human rights abuses by Israel which led to my participation in the national J Street Conference. I was gratified to hear from many of the speakers that they and their organizations are working to expose and publicize those abuses and to develop and mobilize the political strength of moderate Israelis. Those wise Israelis are taking the lead to bring Israel to a two­state solution, to end the occupation and human rights abuses, and to hold the torch for peace and justice in the Middle East.

Zach Gerger

As a long­time passionate supporter of Israel, I search to understand the various perspectives of Israeli advocacy organizations in the US. To that end I attended the J Street annual conference. I went with an open mind yet found myself troubled by the profound disconnect between J­Street’s stated pro­Israel principles and the rhetoric at the conference. I witnessed little actual support for Israel, while speaker after speaker made accusations against the very country J Street purports to advocate for. In session after session, the context for discussing Israel and the Palestinian peace process was consistently framed through the lens of what Israel is and was doing wrong. Holding Israeli policies and politicians solely responsible for current problems was standard fare with little if any discussion of the Palestinian role in the conflict. Notable exceptions were sessions that recognized security measures are necessary for Israel to successfully implement a two­state solution. Yet the presenter ultimately concluded that Israel is exclusively to blame for the obstacles preventing implementation of a two­state solution. There’s no doubt that the Israel conversation is complex. Creating an open forum for multiple perspectives and opinions is critical to the wellbeing of Israel and a conflicted North American Jewry. Yet despite its stated mission as a pro­Israel organization, my experience left me with the impression that J­Street support is actually, sadly, far more pro­Palestinian.

David deGroot

Isaac Herzog, head of Israel’s Zionist Union party, said at the opening of his recorded address that “you are friends of Israel and you support one of the most important interests of the State of Israel, which is to reach peace with the Palestinians.”

The unifying theme behind all sessions was support for a two state solution to the Israeli­Palestinian conflict. Shimon Peres’ granddaughter, Mika Almog, addressed this support from a place of a deep connection to Israel and the Jewish people, while Palestinian ambassador to the UN, Riyad Mansour, spoke of it as the realization of Palestinian national rights. Combining these two approaches shows that being pro­Israel or pro­Palestinian do not have to be mutually exclusive. In his keynote speech, Senator Bernie Sanders claimed, “We can oppose the policies of President Trump without being anti­American. We can oppose the policies of Netanyahu without being anti­Israel.”

Full Length Documentary Film Features Local World War II Jewish War Veterans
Film Entirely Produced Locally; to Premier in November

By Amy Krakovitz

More than 500,000 Jewish people served in the armed forces in World War II. An estimated 8,000 with Jewish ancestry died in battle and 18,000 were taken as prisoners of war. The remaining Jewish veterans have lived their lives with honor, members of “The Greatest Generation.” But their stories will be gone. And he knew that their stories would be gone. And yet, a small group of Charlotteans was determined not to let the voices of our local Jewish War Veterans be lost to the ages. They have joined forces to create a documentary that features the stories of our local Jewish World War II veterans.

It began in November of 2013, when Iraq/Afghanistan war veteran Barry Ross was determined to breathe new life into the local Jewish World War II Veterans’ post. He sent out notices to local vets to start meeting again and by February 2014 they had their first meeting. “Veterans’ Posts are not supposed to be social clubs,” Ross said, “so we were looking for a project to benefit the local members.” Ross realized what most of us already know about Holocaust survivors, that the voices of the World War II veterans will soon be gone. And he knew that their stories were both fascinating and precious.

So he, Steve Russak, another member of the local JAVV post, and Eileen Schwartz, who operates Flags Across the Nation, a non-profit organization that supports the arts for US military veterans, came together to brainstorm.

Their solution was to record the stories of local area Jewish veterans and create a video testimony, similar to what the Library of Congress already has done with many war veterans. “The mission of the project was not simply to document stories, but rather to create an engaging and dynamic video that would especially impact younger viewers,” states Russak, the current Post Commander.

It was Schwartz’s experience in the Jewish community that led her to suggest applying for an Impact Fund grant from the Jewish Federation of Greater Charlotte, and when they received the award, they were able to proceed with their project, Seeking Assistance.

With no real video experience among them, they sought out partners in the production industry and found Glenn Fishkin at Full Scale Productions. As a member of the Jewish community who has “always had a special place in my heart for our veterans,” Fishkin heard the proposal from Ross, Russak, and Schwartz and said, “I was in.”

With his expertise, he knew he could deliver a professional and dynamic film. And while the funds received from the Impact Fund were a great start, they needed to raise more money for a full length documentary.

Together they set up a GoFundMe page (www.gofundme.com/jews-ww2-doc) where they have nearly reached their goal. “We are moved and blessed by everyone’s donations,” Fishkin said, with a special thanks to Barbara and Jerry Levin.

It was Schwartz who managed the interviews with initial help from Jewish Family Services. “At first the vets were so humble,” she said, “they felt that they didn’t deserve this recognition.” But their stories were compelling and mesmerizing, not to mention both humorous and poignant. “How could we NOT tell these stories?” Fishkin asked rhetorically.

The interviews revealed a complex situation for the Jewish soldiers in World War II. Their Judaism did indeed play a role in their identities, but it was difficult. Very few comrades were Jewish. They were subjected to the expected taunting. But their commanding officers were never anti-Semitic, giving them leeway to stand up for themselves, or coming to their defense if necessary.

And they were proud of themselves, too, as the consensus among non-Jews was that “Jews don’t do that; they don’t fight or serve in the military.”

Once interviewing and filming began, the amount of work and time involved in making a film of this scope became apparent. Many volunteers were enlisted, including Morry Alter, a former feature reporter from WCBS in New York.

Since the project began, four of the interviewees have passed away, highlighting the urgency of the project.

Now that Fishkin has the film in the editing stage, Ross, Russak, and Schwartz are thinking about future plans for the completed piece. There will be a red carpet premier on Veterans Day weekend at Ballantyne Theater, with the remaining vets in attendance. Tickets will be free and there will be a dessert reception following the film. The trailer for the film can be seen at the gofundme site: www.gofundme.com/jews-ww2-doc.

But the team also sees more possibilities for the final product: submission to the Library of Congress, entries into Jewish Film Festivals, becoming part of the public school curriculum, being shown nationwide on PBS, and becoming a resource item in libraries. Anything is possible.

The team would like to thank the Jewish Federation of Greater Charlotte and Susan Gundersheim and Jeff Turk of the Charlotte Jewish Film Festival for their assistance.

A Look Back …

By Judy H. August, FCJC Immediate Past Chair

“What I do matters!”* Our Charlotte Jewish community has exemplified this motto with our generous legacy commitments to Charlotte’s Jewish organizations. Four years ago, 10 of our organizations embarked on a major initiative to grow their endowments through legacy giving, to better secure their operations and programming, and to promote a vibrant future for the Charlotte Jewish community. The Foundation for the Charlotte Jewish Community (FCJC) has been leading that charge through our “Create Your Jewish Legacy” initiative, and the Charlotte Jewish community has responded with a resounding “Count me in!”

As of 2016, 335 individuals and families have made legacy commitments totaling a projected $25.6 million in future gifts. The impact of this initiative is already making a difference. Since 2008, the community has received $2.5 million in realized legacy gifts, $180,000 in 2016.

Many of our donors now utilize FCJC’s professionals, Phil Warshauer and Nancy Kipnis, to provide guidance on how to best structure their gifts. Working under the Foundation for the Carolinas umbrella, the sixth largest community foundation in the country with over $2.1 billion in assets under management, Phil and Nancy provide our individual donors and our organizations with the resources and expertise they need, while also developing strong personal relationships.

In addition to legacy gifts, many donors utilize FCJC Donor Advised Funds (DAFs) as a tax-advantaged and efficient way to manage their annual and long-range giving strategies. In fact, an increasing number of donors, including Stan and I, have moved our DAFs to FCJC from a commercial provider and have been so impressed by the services we have received. It is also rewarding to know that we are supporting such a worthwhile community resource as FCJC in the process.

Fund Raiser to Support Familial Dysautonomia Research

By Natalie Cohen

Many of you know my sister, Frannie Cohen, and for anyone that does not know her: trust me, if you did, you would admire her almost as much as I do. She has a rare genetic condition called Familial Dysautonomia (FD). FD affects her autonomic and sensory nervous system, impacting practically every major system within her body. I could go on and give a long list of what people with FD cannot do and everything that is impacted by the condition, but that list is not nearly as important as what people with FD can do. Frannie works hard on a daily basis to overcome any obstacle that comes her way and continues to thrive in life and be an inspiration to everybody who crosses paths with her.

FD used to be categorized as a fatal disease, but advances in treatment have dramatically extended the lives of people with FD, giving them more and more opportunities to thrive. Nonetheless, there are still many symptoms that prevent my sister and her friends from living normal lives and every day is a new challenge; against all odds, they always overcome these challenges stronger than they are accredited.

This year I am holding my fourth annual fundraising event in honor of my sister. I have raised

AIPAC Policy Conference 2017: The View from Participants

Sam Zimmern:
Our group of 17 from Charlotte was diverse with Democrats and Republicans, Jews and Christians, and AIPAC first timers as well as conference veterans. We heard our country’s leaders reaffirm their bipartisan support for a strong American-Israeli relationship based on common security issues as well as common values. A wide range of other people addressed the audience and described many of the great things Israel has done including the President of Rwanda, students from Africa, doctors who have treated Syrians and Palestinians), and humanitarian aid in all parts of the world -- including to neighboring Syrians and Palestinians), and how Israel is building alliances with partners like India and Rwanda. I consider myself to be reasonably well-informed about Israel and I felt like I was learning from scratch.

Alyson Grossman Traw:
19,000 – an amazing number by any measure. That’s how many people were in attendance at AIPAC’s Policy Conference in Washington, D.C., March 26-28. Growing up Jewish was hard work – schlepping hours in the car each week to and from Religious School, Bat Mitzvah prep classes, and confirmation classes. Growing up Jewish was hard work – but it was worth it. Knowing that Israel was there, meant I was never alone as a Jew in the world. Because I’ve never travelled to Israel, Policy Conference is as close as I have gotten to experiencing Israel. I passionately believe that a strong Israel-America partnership is mutually beneficial (and necessary) for both countries to remain strong, safe, and vibrant. During general sessions, we learned about Israeli technological innovations, how Israel provides humanitarian aid in all parts of the world (including to neighboring Syrians and Palestinians), and

On the main stage were key US, Israeli, and other international speakers, and there was a wide array of intimate breakout sessions on topics from Israel and Central Asian relations to LGBT issues.

The clear message throughout the political speeches was that America will always have an unbreakable bond with Israel.

The headline speakers all touched on three main issues: the UN, Iran, and BDS. The consensus message was that the anti-Israel bias at the UN must and will stop and that current administration is taking clear steps to change US direction there. The most focused speech was from former SC Governor, current UN Ambassador Nikki Haley. She outlined and stressed the steps the US has and will take to push back against various UN bodies for the consistent bias and resolutions aimed at Israel. Iran was a target discussing how the current deal does not stop Iran’s path to a nuclear bomb, how US policy must continue to enforce the deal’s provisions and implement new sanctions to penalize Iranian transgressions, and take actions to stop their worldwide terror march.

Robert Adler:
Divest, Sanction movement. This was my third consecutive AIPAC convention. This year saw Jews, Christians, blacks, whites, men, women, children, Democrats, Republicans, and Independents, all gathering together to support Israel.

Celebrating our Community's 354 Legacy Donors

Foundation for the Charlotte Jewish Community (FCJC) thanks the 354 individuals and families who have created Jewish legacies to ensure the future of our local Jewish community. These generous donors have collectively committed more than $25.9 million through future bequests, as well as proceeds from life insurance and retirement plans, without affecting current disposable income or lifestyles. Our legacy initiative is already making an impact: to date, local Jewish organizations have received at least $2.5 million in legacy gifts, including $180,000 in 2016. FCJC established the Book of Life Society to honor and recognize all individuals and families whose legacy gifts will support organizations that are integral to Jewish life and community in Charlotte. If you are interested in learning how to create your own Jewish legacy, please contact your favorite Jewish organization or Phil Warshawer or Nancy Kipnis.

AIPAC Policy Conference 2017

lighted as infecting many institutions both here and abroad and we must fight it with increasing urgency. At home, we must fight BDS on college campuses where their advocates have made inroads with various groups and faculty under the guise of painting Israel as an “apartheid regime.” At one event sponsored by Africans for Israel, a South African black speaker who lived for decades under real apartheid now advocates for the growing partnership between Israel and African nations directly negating the narrative that Israel is an apartheid regime.

The protests continue this year with the usual mix of groups voicing opinions against Israel, AIPAC, and the US. A new Jewish group has appeared called If Not Now. They are primarily Jewish millennials protesting AIPAC and the “occupation.” If these protestors could have heard many of the non-Jewish the speakers inside perhaps they would see they are wrong.

One main stage discussion focused on a West Bank Palestinian man and his son who was born with a life-threatening heart defect. Together with the Peres Center for Peace and PA, he received successful life-saving surgery. Another speaker from the IDF discussed how wounded Syrians approached the border fence asking for medical help. The IDF started treating thousands of wounded men, women, and children without any publicity. Unfortunately, many of these stories fall on the deaf ears of the protestors.

Policy conference is a great environment for people of all walks of life, whether Jewish or not, to celebrate Jewish and Israeli culture, history, politics, see the positive impact that Israel has on our world, and to better understand the dangers facing not just Jews but many other minorities worldwide and how to help move past that.

Hebrew Highlights – Why Hebrew High

-Part Two

Below is a brief statement given by a Hebrew High student as part of the Teen Shabbat service at Temple Beth El.

Shabbat shalom. Hello everyone my name is Tyler Lewis and I am a student in the Hebrew for High School credit class offered through Hebrew high.

The class is taught by Morah Donna DeGroot, a teacher at the Charlotte Jewish Day School. I am in my second year of the course, and it has helped me become closer to my faith and closer to prayer itself.

The class builds on the skills learned in Hebrew school when you are younger and develops them into real conversational Hebrew. I particularly look forward to using these while on a Birthright trip to Israel.

Morah Donna has also used the class to further our understanding of modern Israeli culture and lifestyle. As a class we have helped at a Jewish wedding service for a young Orthodox couple and even watched the Hebrew version of Harry Potter. Two of my classmates went on a summer trip to Israel to apply what we have learned to reality.

Over the past two years in the class I have seen in myself and in my classmates, not only the development of our Hebrew skills but also a deepening of our individual connection to prayer and Judaism.

These heartfelt words form one of our students, really captures the essence of Hebrew High. Every Wednesday evening our teens are exploring their faith and learning the skills needed to become comfortable, knowledgeable, Jewish adults. Guided by an amazing faculty of dedicated clergy and lay leaders, they embrace their history and look forward to leading our community into the future.

If you have a child or grandchild who is entering 8th-12th grade, please encourage them to enroll. At Hebrew High we continue to give Jewish teens in Charlotte a safe space to explore the world through the lens of Jewish values. That is why Hebrew High is the place to be on Wednesday nights.

SYNAGOGUES & CONGREGATIONS

Lag B’omer – Mother’s Day Family Fun Day
Sunday May 14 - At William R. Davie Park

Lag B’omer coincides this year with Mother’s Day and Chabad of Charlotte is inviting all Jewish families of the Greater Charlotte area to join together for an exciting family fun day at William R Davie Park in southeast Charlotte. There will be music, children’s activities, arts and crafts, and a delicious kosher barbecue dinner. All moms in attendance will be part of a raffle for a special mother’s day prize.

The event starts at 4 PM with a barbecue dinner at 5 PM at Davie Park, 4635 Pineville-Matthews Road in Charlotte. Fee $18 per person and $45 per family.

Lag B’omer is a day of bon fires and outdoor fun in Israel as people throughout the country celebrate the life of Rabbi Akiva’s students and his prime disciple, Rabbi Shimon Bar Yochai. According to Jewish tradition, Lag B’omer was the day that a major epidemic that afflicted the disciples of Rabbi Akiva in the days of the Talmud ended. The event carries even today as we reflect the major impact it had on Jewish life in Israel. Lag B’omer also marks the anniversary of Rabbi Shimon Bar Yochai’s ascension to heaven. Rabbi Shimon is most famous and revered in the Talmud as one of the greatest leaders of the Jews in the harsh days of the Roman occupation of Israel.

The Zohar relates that Rabbi Shimon assembled his closest disciples on Lag B’omer and taught them the secrets of Kabbalah. A fiery pillar surrounded him as he uttered the word life and his soul ascended upwards with the fire. It is an ancient tradition to light bon fires all over Israel.

Lag B’omer is the day that breaks the period of mourning between Passover and Shavuot and is a day reserved for fun, games, and barbecue.

For more information on this event please visit our website at: chabadnc.net or call our office at 704-366-3984.

Shavuot Event at Ohr HaTorah on May 31 Celebrates the Gift of Children

The festival of Shavuot, which falls this year on May 31 and June 1, one of the most significant events in Jewish history. The giving of the Torah by God to the people of Israel at Mount Sinai some 3329 years ago. The event changed the mission statement of the Jewish people and it is created an unbreakable bond between God and the people of Israel. The very existence of Judaism today is directly linked to this landmark event which altered the Jewish people forever.

According to the Midrash and the Talmud, the superstars of this amazing event are the children. God asked Moses for trustworthy guarantors for the safekeeping of the Torah. At first Moses offered the Jewish leaders, patriarchs, and matriarchs as guarantors but they were not accepted. God only accepted the children as guarantors as they will ensure that the Torah will be kept, revered, and observed and most of all transmitted from generation to generation.

Ohr HaTorah will celebrate this Shavuot with the children taking the center stage at the holiday morning service on Wednesday, May 31. The children will march into the sanctuary at 11 AM to witness the special reading in the Torah scroll in the portion of the Torah that describes the story of the giving of the Torah including the reading of the Ten Commandments.

There will also be a festive dairy Kiddush lunch after the service. The children will be treated to an assortment of kosher ice cream delights during the Kiddush. One of the remarkable customs which is quite popular is eating dairy foods like cheesecake or cheese blintzes on Shavuot. One of the reasons for this custom is that Jews first began to observe kosher dietary laws with the giving of the Torah and the most readily available foods to them at the time were milk and cheese. Another reason for this custom is that Torah is likened to mother’s milk, which nurtures the child.

There is no charge for this event. For more information please visit our website: www.chabadnc.org. Or call our office at 704-366-3984.
Temple Kol Ami and Tikkun Olam

At Temple Kol Ami of Fort Mill, the Jewish concept of Tikkun Olam, repairing the world, is a very important aspect of our community. TKA has been involved in numerous social action and mitzvah projects in the last year involving many of our congregants. Starting at Rosh Hashanah, TKA sponsored our annual food drive to benefit the Jewish Family Services in Charlotte. We collected hundreds of pounds of canned goods and non-perishables for donation to the food pantry.

Teaching our students about these concepts is a focus of the Temple Kol Ami Religious School. Our kids made travel menorahs and thank you cards to send to Jewish soldiers at Fort Bragg, NC. In addition, they contributed personal hygiene items to make “care kits” for our service members. During Purim, students decorated gift bags and donated candy, mints, and other items to make mishloach manot for the senior citizens of Dorchester Retirement Community. The previous Purim, the gift bags were donated to Safe Passages, a Domestic Violence shelter in Rock Hill. Last year during the floods in South Carolina, our kids helped out by donating items to send in the relief effort. Mitzvah projects for our b’nei mitzvah students are also a point of emphasis at TKA. TKA member Jaiden Vanden Broecke has been collecting children’s books to donate to the Levine Children’s Hospital in preparation for her Bat Mitzvah.

During Tu BiShevat, it is considered a mitzvah to plant a tree. TKA members Andrew and Will Lyons and David and Reece Dobro participated in a tree planting at the Hebrew Cemetery of Charlotte on February 12 in observance of Tu BiShevat. It was a great way to contribute to the Charlotte community and beautify the cemetery.

As you can see, Temple Kol Ami has been busy doing our part to help the local community as well as others far away. If you live in the York County or South Charlotte area, we would love for you to join our community and contribute to the great work we have started. You can find out about what is going on at TKA at our website www.templekolamisc.org or e-mail us at yorksynagogue@gmail.com for more information. You are always welcome to drop in at one of our Friday night Shabbat services and meet our Rabbi Ana Bonnheim as well as the rest of our welcoming congregation. Rabbi Bonnheim will be with us on May 19. Our quarterly Shabbatons are free and open to the public so keep an eye on the website for details on that.

Do you know a Jewish teen who has shown Jewish pride through his or her actions? Share your story with us!

The Zachary Shporer Jewish Pride Award was created in the Spring of 2012 to honor the memory of our beloved alumn, Zachary Shporer, who attended the Charlotte Jewish Day School from kindergarten through eighth grade. While Zachary possessed many amazing attributes, the one that sticks out most in many of our minds is his Jewish pride.

Zachary incorporated Jewish values into every aspect of his life. He did not necessarily choose easy mitzvot or popular mitzvot. He didn’t call attention to himself. But he carried the Torah in his heart and acted according to its teachings.

At CJD, we want to continue Zachary’s legacy by celebrating and recognizing Jewish students through high school, who, like Zachary, demonstrate their Jewish pride in their everyday lives.

Share your nominations with us! We will be accepting nominations for the award from now until Passover. From all the nominations, a nominee will be selected by our Nominations Committee and will be recognized at the CJD Graduation Ceremony.

Every day a Jewish teen does something extraordinary to demonstrate their Jewish pride. But we need your help to know the full story!

A $250 grant will be awarded to the recipient’s Jewish life (i.e. camp, Hebrew school, Jewish books).

Engaging Baby Boomers

By Rabbi Asher Knight, Temple Beth El

When I first arrived in Charlotte, I met hundreds of congregants through welcome events planned by Temple Beth El’s Transition Committee. During these events, I repeatedly heard similar stories from our members, particularly baby boomers and empty nesters. They told me that they felt deeply tied emotionally to our congregation and to Jewish life, but they also felt disconnected from one another and from a sense of community. They wanted cohorts of friends and community with which to connect, grow, learn, and sustain each other’s lives. Further, they recognized that they must be stakeholders in building the future of our Jewish community. I quickly realized that our congregation has made huge strides in senior, young adult, and youth engagement but we have a large engagement gap with a significant portion of our members.

In the fall of 2016, Temple Beth El joined several Reform congregations across the nation in a Community of Practice dedicated to engaging baby boomers and empty nesters. Our working group, chaired by Holly Levinson, is a diverse group of more than thirty Temple Beth El members who have met regularly throughout the fall and winter to learn about dynamics facing this age demographic, explore principles of engagement, and plan and execute a Listening Campaign. We are thankful to the Jewish Federation of Greater Charlotte for funding this initiative through an Impact and Innovation grant. The team’s energy and excitement has been palpable as they planned and prepared to listen to our members.

On March 29, Temple Beth El held a Listening Campaign kick-off event with over two hundred people in attendance. The evening was invigorating and included over twenty listening circles, facilitated by members of our Baby Boomers Working Group and Board of Directors. We listened to new members sharing stories with people who grew up at Temple their whole lives and people expressing the blessings and challenges of retiring to a new city. Members who are considering retirement discussed the obstacles, fears, and excitement in the years ahead. Many people voiced a deep desire for genuine connections to community, Jewish spirituality, and meaningful learning.

The evening was a good reminder that it is in our homes, neighborhoods, and in our synagogues where people form relationships that add substance, support, and meaning to our lives. I am proud that we created an opportunity for conversation and to learn from our members’ lived experiences. Most importantly, we have developed a dynamic and dedicated team that will help us to create a new reality through engaging our members. I want to share a brief preview of what we heard:

• Long standing members are proud of raising their children in the congregation and are now looking for their own place of connection and relationship.
• Baby boomers are looking forward to many years of life and are interested in meaningful learning, developing personal spiritual practices, and strong social networks.
• Jews are following their children to Charlotte. People have articulated that coming into a large congregation, especially without professional networks or connections developed around school age children, can feel intimidating and overwhelming.

The kick-off event was a giant step in our commitment to leverage the temple’s strengths and expand our current conceptions of what synagogue life in the 21st century can look like, both inside our temple walls and in the broader community.

Hilda Laskar Celebrates Her 100th Birthday

By Ellen Orenstein

My mother, Hilda Oksenhandler Laskar, daughter of Moishe and Roza Oksenhandler, was born in Poland on April 10, 1917, and recently celebrated her 100th birthday. As the rise of Hitler took hold in Europe, Hilda’s married sister escaped Poland with her husband to try and find a safe haven for the family. After traveling throughout Europe and being expelled from each country, they ended up in Morocco. At the age of 16, Hilda followed the path of her sister, met with an underground group in France, and then continued on her journey to Morocco. It was there, an Arab country with a large Sephardic population, that these escapees of the holocaust were welcomed. This Jewish community of Morocco were descendants of victims of the Spanish Inquisition. No one else from Hilda’s family was able to leave Poland and ended up being victims of WWII. At the age of 17, Hilda married a young Sephardic businessman, Alberto Laskar, and had three children. After the war, Alberto traveled to Europe to try and find survivors. He found only three members of the family of 80. It was shortly after 1948 that Morocco, a colony of France and Spain, gained its independence. Most Spaniards and Frenchmen left, prompting the Jews to leave too. It was then that Alberto, Hilda, and their three children left for New York and more recently to Charlotte, NC. Happy 100th birthday to a survivor and wonderful woman!

What Sex in a Traditional Shavuot Reading Can Teach Today’s Teens

By Donna Kirshbaum

Omer, Israel (JTA) - As Jews, we tend to pride ourselves on our tradition’s values and how we pass them on to future generations; values such as education, tzedakah, loving the stranger, pursuing justice, and tikun olam, “repair of the world.” But if you were to start a conversation today with a teenager, would you be ready to articulate Jewish values related to dating and sexuality?

Several such values can be gleaned straight from the Book of Ruth customarily read during the holiday of Shavuot, which begins this year on the evening of May 30. Best known for its embrace of Ruth as a convert to Judaism and its emphasis on loving-kindness, the Book of Ruth also includes interactions that have a potential for divine connection.

Rabbi Donna Kirshbaum

connection in sexual encounters does not make Jewish tradition averse to sex and sexuality; it encourages sexual pleasure. But the Jewish context is bigger than two consenting adults in a bed. It includes remembering in whose image we are created, that we are God’s partners in improving and sanctifying life, and that freedom and responsibility are both essential for authentic relationships that help both partners grow.

Jewish teens, living in a complex world full of competing values, need to hear that the more they are able to connect sex to love and love to respect, the more deeply satisfied and whole both they and their partners will feel. Jewish Women International recently produced “Dating Abuse: Tools for Talking to Teens,” an online video course for parents and teens about healthy relationships, prevention of abuse, and proven interventions.

The curriculum notes that teens, especially girls, are “bombarded with the glorification of idealized, romantic, obsessive love” and that many boys are “inundated with hyper-sexualized messages reducing relationships to degrading sex, glorifying control of women’s bodies, and promoting violence.” But it also reminds parents and other trusted adults that they can counteract these influences by sharing their own values with their children.

Although the Book of Ruth is an ancient text told in only four chapters, it can be a source of Jewish values for teens entering the world of dating today. These include the importance of giving actions their right names; for instance, naming any form of coerced or non-consensual sexual activity as abuse. Another is that every human act, even one that seems instinctive and often depicted as a purely physical transaction, deserves the dignity that comes from being God’s partners. A third is that sex is potentially holy and not something innately shameful.

Of course, the story of Naomi, Ruth, and Boaz has much to teach everyone about healthy relationships. JWI’s holiday guide, “Re-thinking Shavuot: Women, Relationships, and Jewish Texts” (available as a free download), provides excerpts from the Book of Ruth along with contemporary commentaries and conversation starters, especially for college-age students and adults at all stages of life.

As the Jewish world prepares to celebrate revolution at Shavuot, may we all continue to learn and teach enduring Jewish values that continue to be revealed to us through our conversations with and about our texts.

(Rabbi Donna Kirshbaum is a member of JWI’s Clergy Task Force on Domestic Abuse in the Jewish Community.)

“Do not urge me to leave you or to return from following you. For where you go I will go, and where you lodge I will lodge. Your people shall be my people, and your God my God. Where you die I will die, and there will I be buried. May the Lord do so to me and to you.”

Gluten-Free Cheese Blintzes for Shavuot: All the Love Without All the Guilt

By Dawn Lerman/JNS.org

Editor’s Note: In her recently published memoir, “My Fat Dad: A Memoir of Food, Love, and Family, with Recipes,” New York Times wellness blogger and nutritionist Dawn Lerman shares her food journey and that of her father, a copywriter from the “Mad Men” era of advertising.

Dawn spent her childhood constantly hungry. She craved good food as her father, 450 pounds at his highest, encouraged endless diets, from Atkins to Pritikin to all sorts of freeze-dried, saccharin-laced concoctions, and insisted the family do the same—even though no one else was overweight. Dawn’s mother, on the other hand, could barely be bothered to eat a can of tuna over the sink. She was too busy ferrying her other daughter to acting auditions and slogging Dawn for cleaning the house.

“My Fat Dad” is as much a coming-of-age memoir as it is a recipe collection from Dawn’s upbringing and culinary adventures. The recipes include some of her grandmother’s favorite traditional Jewish dishes, but also healthier interpretations of them ranging from gluten-free, to dairy-free, to kasher, to vegan.

Ahead of the dairy-oriented Shavuot holiday, JNS.org presents the following excerpt from “My Fat Dad,” in addition to a recipe for gluten-free cheese blintzes.

The cover of “My Fat Dad,” by Dawn Lerman. Credit: Berkeley Books

By Dawn Lerman

On the weekends, my little sister April and I knew the only way to awake my father was to make him a scrumptious breakfast in bed. I would stare at my mom prepare depended on the diet du jour and the number on the big chalkboard above the scale in our bathroom that showed his current weight. My dad weighed himself every morning, every night, and after each meal. He was a stickler for every victory and every setback in white chalk. He usually weighed around 350 pounds, but would often fluctuate a hundred pounds on either end. We usually knew how our day would be if the numbers were going up or down. If the numbers were going down, it might be a cheat day; but if the numbers were going up, I had to conjure up something tasty, but a little more calorie friendly.

On Shavuot, my dad looked forward to little packages of love — aka cheese blintzes. I had made them from scratch several times with my maternal grandmother Beauty. I would move from Chicago to New York City, but never by myself. When I called my grandmother for guidance, she said that when I was little, she would keep a little box which was her age when she started making the blintzes for her family in a hotel. She was buried in her home, she knew I could do it. But my grandmother always thought I could do everything perfectly, which was not always the case — especially when it came to singing and dancing, which were my four-year-old little sister’s forte.

“The trick to not being overwhelmed making the blintzes is to do it in two parts,” said Beauty. “In the morning, make the crepes for the shell and fill them so they would have time to set overnight and be ready for frying in the morning.” Beauty said the smell of the blintzes frying in butter could arouse even the deepest of sleepers. With my grandmother’s encouragement, I began gathering the cheese for the filling, and the yogurt and berries for the topping. I wanted my blintzes to be as delectable as the traditional Jewish ones that my dad loved — but these ones needed to be a little lighter on calories. My dad was now a top creative director at a major ad agency, and appearances were very important to his clients — especially since his clients included many major fast food and beverage products.

I had seen my grandmother prepare the blintzes so many times that I was confident that I could replicate them, even though I was swapping my father’s diet protein powder for flour. I was making sure they met the requirements of my new low-carbohydrate diet.

Wanting to surprise my dad, I woke him up to help me prepare his special breakfast. I carefully made the crepes just the way Beauty showed me. Ever since then, every morning he reaches for the counter with a step stool, I had helped him mix, fill, and roll. In the morning, when I began frying the assembled blintzes, my dad flew into the kitchen. “Is that what I think it is?” he asked, exalted as he saw the displayed blintzes that my sister and I arranged on my grandmother’s best china.

As I watched my dad enjoy the gluten-free blintzes with no mention of the ingredient swaps, I realized I could reach his weight loss goals, while still enjoying the foods that conjured fond memories from his childhood.

For Shavuot, Try This Super Easy Strawberry Rhubarb Trifle

By Shannon Sarna

New York (JTA) — Forget fancy pastries, cakes or trays. Trifles are the best dessert you can make for entertaining. They are delicious and look beautiful and impressive, but are actually one of the easiest desserts you can make.

The first time I made a trifle was actually after a baking mistake. My Bundt cake had fallen apart mere hours before Shabbat dinner, and I was in a pinch to throw together a dessert. I threw the botched cake into a trifle dish, added some fresh fruit and chocolate mousse and voila — I was able to save dessert.

Shavuot is traditionally a time where we serve cheesecake, blintzes, and other delicious, but heavy, dairy dishes. This trifle sings of spring flavors while being much lighter than your average cheesecake. And there’s no baking required — and only minimal cooking — since I suggest using a store-bought pound cake. Which leaves you more time for your all-night Shavuot studying. Or sitting outside with a glass of iced tea and a bowl full of trifle.

Strawberry Rhubarb Trifle Ingredients:

- 2 lbs. rhubarb, chopped into 1” pieces
- 1 pt. strawberries, cut in half and stems removed
- 1 c. sugar
- Juice of half lemon plus zest
- 1/2 c. water
- 2 T. heavy whipping cream
- 1 T. vanilla
- Store-bought pound cake
- Additional strawberries and mint for garnish (optional)

Preparation:
To make the strawberry rhubarb compote, combine the chopped rhubarb, hulled strawberries, sugar, water, and lemon juice in a saucepan. Bring to a boil over medium-high heat and then reduce to simmer for 10-15 min., till pieces of rhubarb have broken down and the mixture is soft.
Place rhubarb mixture into a food processor fitted with blade attachment. Pulse a few times to smooth out mixture or until it has reached your desired consistency. To make the whipped cream, place the heavy cream in a large chilled bowl and mix on low speed using a hand mixer or stand mixer for 2 minutes. Increase speed to high and add vanilla. Add 2 T. sugar and mix until you have stiff peaks.
To assemble, crumble the pound cake on the bottom of a trifle dish or large glass bowl. Add 1/5 to 1/4 rhubarb compote on top. Cover with whipped cream. Repeat layers until you have reached the top. Add fresh strawberries and mint on top if desired.

According to Beauty, the secret to making the perfect blintzes was to get the shell paper-thin. “It’s all in the wrist,” she would say. I remember, when I was little, watching her effortlessly tilt the hot pan as she poured in the silky crepe to prevent it from sticking.

The trick to not being overwhelmed making the blintzes is to do it in two parts. In the morning, make the crepes for the shell and fill them so they would have time to set overnight and be ready for frying in the morning.

It is not that milk does not grow on a gro­cery store shelf.

The restaurant — famous for its pizza, filo dough filled with two types of goat cheese and fresh red pepper, and knafeh made of Kadaif noodles, cheese, and pistachios — uses only local produce and wine. While not kosher certified, all of the Kornmehl farm products are kosher and they do not operate on Shabbat.

Brent Delman of Yonkers, NY, who is known as the “Cheese Guy,” said several factors can affect the taste of cheese, from the type and breed of the animal to the land on which they graze and even the air they breathe. He explained that sheep and goats tend to have more fat in their milk and that it is higher in protein.

“Their goats graze naturally. The Kornmehls believe that the health of their goats affects the quality of their cheese. The goats are antibi­otic and hormone free and the Ko­rnmehls give constant attention to the goats’ living conditions and food. The move to the Negev made their organic dreams possible.

The Kornmehl’s land is leased from the gov­ernment. The couple manages waste care­fully to protect the frag­ile environment and minimalize damage to the land caused by the herd.

“There is a moment in the tractate Menahot when the Rabbis imagine what takes place when Moses ascends Mount Sinai to receive the Torah. In this account (there are several) Moses ascends to heaven, where he finds God busily adding crownlike ornaments to the letters of the Torah.

Moses asks God what He is doing and God explains that in the future there will be a man named Akiva, son of Joseph, who will base a huge mountain of Jewish law on these very orthographic ornaments. Intrigued, Moses asks God to show this man to him. Moses is told to ‘go back eighteen rows,’ and suddenly, as in a dream, Moses is in a classroom, class is in session and the teacher is none other than Rabbi Akiva.

Moses has been told to go to the back of the study house because that is where the youngest and least educated students sit.

“Akiva, the great first-century sage, is explaining Torah to his disciples, but Moses is completely unable to follow the lesson. It is far too complicated for him. He is filled with sadness when, suddenly, one of the disciples asks Akiva how he knows something is true and Akiva answers: ‘It is derived from a law given to Moses on Mount Sinai.’ Upon hearing this answer, Moses is satisfied — though he can’t resist asking why, if such brilliant men as Akiva exist, Moses needs to be the one to deliver the Torah. At this point God loses patience and tells Moses, ‘Silence, it’s my will.’”

home of Israel’s first prime minis­ter, David Ben-Gurion, the farm is a striking example of how the once vast desert region that most tourists simply ignored is bloom­ing today.

Owners Anat and Daniel Korn­mehl are considered by many chefs to be the finest makers of goat cheese in Israel. People flock from across the Negev as well as other parts of Israel, to taste the farm’s camembert, Tommes de Pyrenees, Edna, and their hard Alpine-like cheese called Adi, named after one of their goats.

Come Shavuot, when families focus on dairy at their festive meals, the establishment becomes even more popular.

As an extra touch, the Kornmehls provided their own table settings, a nod to the tradition of farmers and their work. The cheeses are personal inter­pretations of famous French varietics. Anat Kornmehl said the Negev, with its low humidity, is condu­cive to raising goats.

It has also been conducive to raising children. A mother of three, Anat Kornmehl said the youths help out on the farm and enjoy the animals. They also get “Sometimes I walk with them [the goats],” he said. “I take them up to the milking shed, close the gate and help feed them,” Michael said, noting he also works in the restau­rant, usually selling the cheeses or washing dishes.

Does he play with the goats?

“Not much. There is not much to play with,” he said with a laugh.

“Goats are stubborn.”

At one time, the Kornmehls had more than 100 goats. But last year, they took a sabbatical to Australia and cut their herd to only 47. Each of the 40 female goats that is of age to bear kids produces roughly 700 liters (185 gallons) of milk per 9- to 10­ month season. One liter of milk is equivalent to 1 liter of yogurt; 6 liters of milk makes about 1 kilo­gram (2.2 pounds) of bri or other milk­y cheeses; and eight to 10 liters of milk makes about 1 kilo­gram of hard cheese.

The Kornmehls allow their baby goats to nurse directly from their mothers in the first two months. Then they wean them, and the rest of the milk is for the farm. People who visit the restau­rant can see the milking process in action. Anat said children visitors love the roaming goats and learn—often for the first time— that milk does not grow on a goc­cery store shelf.
