By Rabbi Judy Schninder

Judy Seldin-Cohen is the latest to join a long line of Charlotte Jews recognized by the non-Jewish community for their active civic engagement. On October 29, Seldin-Cohen received the 2020 Lifetime Advocate Award from the YWCA Central Carolinas for advancing social justice in the Charlotte community and exemplifying the Y's mission of eliminating racism, empowering women, and promoting peace, justice, freedom, and dignity for all people.

Kirsten Sikkelee, CEO of YWCA Central Carolinas, says, “The YWCA's mission is advanced by people of all faith traditions, and Judy Seldin-Cohen is a shining beacon of hope, demonstrating faith in action of the Jewish tradition.”

For nearly 150 years, Jews have made it their priority to lead and to lift up the city of Charlotte. In 1879, Samuel Wittkowsky was the first Jewish president of Charlotte’s Chamber of Commerce. In the 1940s, I.D. Blumenthal brought Brotherhood Week, a program of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, to Charlotte and along with his brother, Herman, purchased and dedicated the mountaintop retreat of Wildav...

From the Editor

Growing up, our choices for breakfast were Captain Crunch or Pop Tarts. What a choice! I went for the Captain Crunch. For lunch, a butter and sugar sandwich (on Wonder Bread) was lovingly placed in my lunchbox next to the “Have a nice day, dear” note, just as lovingly placed. After-school snack? You guessed it — Captain Crunch or Pop Tarts. I opted for the Pop Tarts for variety. And we were one of the first on the block to make powdered mashed potatoes part of our nightly dinner routine.

To be fair, my parents did the best they could with the knowledge they had in the 70s. Research identifying sugar as a primary culprit in heart disease, the best they could with the science they had. I have read the latest books to know how to eat. Acquiriuous was my middle name. I fired my doctor.

This inspired me to learn more about nutrition — the science, politics, and ethics of what we eat. I earned a Certificate in Integrative (Holistic) Nutrition. After my year spent studying every theory, diet, and philosophy out there — paleo, raw, keto, intermittent fasting, juice cleansing — the list goes on — the director pared everything down to this: eat whole foods and not too much. Couldn’t he have led with that and saved us some time and money?

I learned that knowing what to eat is not that difficult. We’re the only species needing myriad books to know how to eat. According to Nielsen BookScan, about 5 million diet books are sold in the U.S. alone every year. More importantly, perhaps, I was reminded of the inextricable link between food and not only my physical health but also my emotional and spiritual well-being. Food is more than fuel. Food is memories. Food is social. Food is expressive. If we wake up with food in our refrigerators, food is security (and an estimated 15 million households in the U.S. do not). It is rare when an issue of CJN lends itself so nicely to a theme. But this month, the theme of food kept coming up. We start on page 25 with an article on Jewish Food 101 and a recipe for Shwarma Chicken Kabobs. Even Cantor Thomas of Temple Beth El mused about food, and Hebrew High is offering a class called Heirloom Recipes. Our online bonus edition (www.charlottejewishnews.org) contains more recipes and links to cooking videos.

We hope you enjoy. Now if you’ll excuse me, my Pop-Tart is ready.

Judy Seldin-Cohen is an author of “Now and Again,” Julia Turshen is an American cook book author, food writer, cook, and food equity advocate. “Equi-pious” has called Julia one of the 100 Greatest Home Cooks of All Time, and The New York Times has described her “at the forefront of the new generation of authentic, approachable authors.”

Judy Seldin-Cohen’s civic engagement was inspired by her Judaism and by her work with Temple Beth El. After bringing turkey casseroles to Temple Beth El’s Room in the Inn and Beth El’s program for sheltering the homeless on Christmas, and after scrubbing a bathtub at the vacant uptown Charlotte Hall House Hotel so it could temporarily be used to house an overflow of homeless families, she recognized the need to go upstream. She desired not only to alleviate the hardships of homelessness but also to eradicate its root causes by working for systemic change.

For more than twelve years, Judy has dug deep to expand housing for Charlotte’s homeless and low-income population. She helped produce award-winning documentaries on social justice issues. She co-authored a book guiding synagogues on the path to civic engagement that received a National Jewish Book Award. Most impressively, she led to envisioning and establishing the $26 million dollar A Way Home Endowment that helps Charlotte-Mecklenburg’s homeless and at-risk families move toward housing and financial independence by providing housing subsidies and support services. She is an author of several cookbooks and the founder of the Kosher Media Network. Geller hosts online cooking shows called the “Joy of Kosher” cooking series.

Charlotte Jewish Film Festival Takes a Look at Race

The Charlotte Jewish Film Festival (CJFF), a program of the Levine JCC Cultural Arts Department, is excited to partner with The Jewish Federation of Greater Charlotte for this special film “They Ain’t Ready for Me,” and the wonderful opportunity to host a live Q&A with the film’s Producer/Director Brad Rothschild and star Tamar Manasseh. As part of both organizations’ commitment to racial justice, we are pleased to offer our community meaningful opportunities to engage and educate on issues of race and racism, through a Jewish perspective.

We are working to adapt to this new COVID-19 reality by offering this flexible, virtual viewing format, in which you can enjoy not only the film on your own time, from the comfort of your home, but also discuss the film with filmmakers and stars who we would never get to meet, a silver lining of this unprecedented time! In “They Ain’t Ready for Me,” Tamar Manasseh, founder of MASK (Mothers Against Senseless Killings), believes she can do anything! A mother and rabbinical student who dreams of becoming a rabbi someday, she is not only emerging as an important voice within Chicago’s Black community but also on her way to becoming a national symbol of what can be achieved as a grassroots activist. Timely and inspirational, “They Ain’t Ready for Me” also demonstrates the challenges Tamar faces in both her Black and Jewish worlds. While she is grateful for the support she receives from the Jewish community, she still cannot help but cringe when she is asked to validate her claim to Judaism just because of the color of her skin.

This will be the first of many virtual film offerings, as the CJFF screening committee is hard at work selecting films for our 2021 festival, which will begin on Saturday, February 1, 2021. We hope this new format will allow us to reach even more audience members who may not have been able to attend our festival in the past but will be able to attend virtually this year.

I am a Charlotte native. I remember when the Charlotte Jewish community was so small that my life revolved around Temple Israel and The Amity Country Club. My first memories of our Jewish traditions were lunches in Gastonia. We went to my grandparents’ home after Sunday school and spent the day with lots of cousins, aunts, and uncles.

Growing up in Charlotte was very much a family affair. I am related to many people in our community because my grandfather, Sidney Cohen, was one of 11 children. My parents, however, also had a group of friends whom I called “Aunt and Uncle.” To this day, there are older members of our community whom I still call “Uncle” even though they ask me to stop!

These people influenced my life as much as my family. The children of these aunts and uncles became my best friends. This was especially true of those who lived in my neighborhood, Colombine, which was on the outskirts of Foxcroft. (Until the late 70s, Jews were not allowed to live in Foxcroft or Myers Park.) Sometimes, it felt like a Jewish shtetl, because we had more than 14 Jewish families within that small neighborhood. We even had our own neighborhood Havdalah services!

I left Charlotte to attend Jack- sonville University but returned in 1989 after teaching in Atlanta and Savannah. I followed the lead of my parents and became involved in our Jewish community. My passion for volunteering began at the Levine Jewish Community Center. After our second child was born, I was chair of the Camp Shalom committee when it became Camp Mindy in 2000! My children shared my family’s values of Jewish leadership, connection, and involvement enjoying the JCC Maccabi Games, BBYO, and countless years at Camp Barney Medintz as campers and staff.

It was my parents who taught me about tzedakah. My dad would not just tell us, but also show us, “You have to give back to the Jewish community. No one else will take care of us. We must make sure we take care of ourselves.” My mother also drilled into us, by her actions, that all Jews are not wealthy, problem-free, and secure. Many families in the Jewish community decide between food and medicine each day.

I have created a Jewish legacy because my family has been able to enjoy a rich Jewish life. I want to ensure that future generations are afforded the same experience.
During our most recent CJE monthly book club discussion, we were talking about selections for upcoming books. The consensus was that many of our members don’t want to read anything “depressing” during the pandemic — our lives are depressing enough. After hearing the same thoughts from some of my friends, I started thinking about what books I could recommend that fall within parameters of our book club — written by a Jewish author or have a Jewish theme, content, or subject matter, and are not too heavy or dark. Sounds easy enough? Right? Wrong. When you are least expecting it, something about World War II and the Holocaust crops up. Then there’s antisemitism that hits too close to home in today’s world. And dark dysfunctional family stories are way too stressful.

In an attempt to find a suitable book, this past week I read “My Wife Says You May Want to Marry Me,” by Jason B. Rosenthal. From the title, it sounded like it might be light. However, it was a beautifully written memoir of love, loss, and new beginnings. Do I write more? Nope. Poignant and inspiring, but can’t say it wasn’t heartbreaking.

Which brings me to my recommendations — two novels by author Brenda Janowitz. A couple of years ago, I read her very funny novel about a modern Jewish family entitled, “The Dinner Party: A Novel.” The matriarch, Sylvia, is hosting Passover seder and has invited the families of her daughters’ boyfriends. One daughter is dating a “Rothschild”; the other daughter has a non-Jewish boyfriend with a seemingly undesirable mother. Sylvia’s preparations for the “perfect” dinner party/seder are seriously over the top! But when we get to the actual evening, everyone is trying to conceal their imperfections, and outright chaos breaks loose when their hidden secrets are exposed for all to see.

When I saw that author Brenda Janowitz had a new novel out, I was eager to read it. The Grace Kelly Dress is charming, entertaining, and fast paced. Two years after Grace Kelly’s royal wedding, her iconic dress is still all the rage in Paris, and one replica and the secrets it carries will inspire three generations of women to forge their own paths in life and in love. (Amazon)

First, we meet Rose in Paris in 1958. She’s a seamstress at a fashion house. Sixty years later we meet her granddaughter tech CEO Rachel, who goes by the childhood name Rocky. Rocky wants nothing to do with the family heirloom wedding dress, but doesn’t want to break her mother Joan’s heart. The lives of these three women come together as the history of the dress and the secrets of the three women are revealed. Fans of Kristen Hannah’s, “The Nightingale” will enjoy the book. Both of Janowitz’s books can be found in the Levine-Sklut Judaic Library.

Book Club News:
Our Center for Jewish Education Monthly Book Club will meet again on Wednesday, November 11, when we will discuss “This Is How It Always Is,” by Laurie Frankel, and on December 9 to talk about “The Bookshop of Yesterdays,” by Amy Meyerson. Both meetings will be on Zoom at 10:30 a.m. Everyone is welcome.

Few individuals have given as much of their time and talents in service of the Charlotte Jewish Community as have Irving Bienstock and Audrey Madans. Longtime residents of Charlotte, both have a long history of volunteerism and leadership not only to their synagogue, Temple Israel, but to the community at large. And neither are strangers to recognition, Audrey having been recognized with Temple Israel’s Commitment to Volunteer Service Award and Irving receiving the Mensch Award, both in 2017. Irving also received the Volunteer of the Year Award in 2007 from the Levine Jewish Community Center. On December 6, they will be honored again with Temple Israel’s Shofar Award, an award that has only been previously awarded five times, at the Temple’s second Annual Winter Concert, “The Best is Yet to Come: An Evening of Light and Celebration.” The Shofar Award was created by the Temple’s Board of Trustees to recognize outstanding individuals in the congregation who have demonstrated, on a continuing basis, their long-term commitment to the synagogue.

But the recognition isn’t why they do it … Says Irving of his years of involvement to the community, “I always considered it an honor to be able to do what I was doing. I never expected that I would receive an honor like this. Actually, I never thought about it … never occurred to me that I would be honored for something I liked to do.”

Irving moved to Charlotte from Brooklyn, New York along with his late wife, Lillian. Irving has been involved with Temple Israel for more than 40 years. He has served as co-president for the Temple Israel Social Club, as a member of the Religion Committee, and has rarely missed a meeting in his role on the Executive Board and Board of Trustees and as a gabbai for 22 years. Irving frequently leads Minyan service on Sunday mornings and in the evenings when the cantor or rabbi is not available.

Irving’s community involvement, however, extends far beyond his synagogue affiliation. For six years Irving served on the board of Jewish Family Services and sat on the Advisory Board to its president for four years. Irving served on a committee that resulted in Generations at Shalom Park. Only time will tell which of Irving’s accomplishments have had the most impact. But at 94 years old, Irving is well known for sharing his personal experience during the Holocaust with more than 3,200 Charlotte school children.

When asked what would Lillian have thought of Irving receiving the Shofar Award, Irving emotionally responded, “I cried afterward, about the fact Lillian wasn’t with me.”

Audrey, too, has a long and rich history of service in the Charlotte Jewish community. Moving to Charlotte with her late husband, Jerome, she has given a lifetime of hours to her volunteer efforts both with Temple Israel and in the Charlotte community. They moved to Charlotte in 1959 and Audrey immediately became involved, teaching Sunday school in the 1960s. She has served multiple terms as president of Women of (Continued on page 13)

SYNAGOGUES AND CONGREGATIONS

Temple Kol Ami Congregant Attends Cantorial School

By Shari Baum

For Shayna Burack, the path to cantorial school has been a long and winding road that started in Fort Mill, South Carolina and made its way to Charlotte, Hungary, Israel, Atlanta and back to Fort Mill. Along the way, diverse Jewish experiences and wonderful mentors influenced her ultimate decision to pursue a career as a cantor.

Born and bred in the Bible Belt, Shayna's parents, Drs. David and Rebecca Burack, wanted her and her sister, Elana, to know what it meant to be Jewish. They enrolled their children at Charlotte Jewish Preschool and Charlotte Jewish Day School (CJDS) where Shayna formed a strong Jewish identity and pride in her Judaism early on. She expresses amazement that much of what she learned at CJDS is still with her today.

Raised in a conservative household, Shayna became a Bat Mitzvah at Temple Israel. While in high school, she participated in a pluralistic Jewish leadership program in Szarvas, Hungary. There she met Russian, Hungarian, Lithuanian, Estonian, Indian, Israeli, and other American Jews. Not only did she make life-long friends at this incredible two-week program, but she also had her first pluralistic Jewish experience that showed her the beauty in all kinds of Jewish practice.

Before college, Shayna spent four months studying at a modern Orthodox seminary in Jerusalem and spent Shabbats “couch-surfing all over the country.” She marvels at the hospitality of the locals who were willing to open their homes to strangers for Shabbat.

While attending college at Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia, Shayna was an active member of Hillel and participated in an inter-religious council. Through open discussions about faith, she learned from students who identified as Christian, Muslim, Hindu, Mormon, and atheist, as well as other Jewish students who identified differently than she did. As a cantor, she hopes to create inter-religious spaces for dialogue that are reminiscent of this very influential experience at Emory.

After graduation, Shayna’s path brought her back home to Fort Mill where she worked in the financial sector and became involved with her family’s new synagogue, Temple Kol Ami, taking on the role of B’nei Mitzvah coordinator and tutor. This work uncovered a passion for educating young, curious minds as well as sharing the beautiful traditions the Jewish people have passed from generation to generation. It was during this time, Shayna and her family suffered the loss of loved ones, and she witnessed the power of clergy to bring peace and hope. She also realized how music brought healing and connection to her and those around her. She finally revisited what had been a middle-school dream and applied to cantorial school. In August, her dream became a reality as she started at the Debbie Friedman School of Sacred Music at Hebrew Union College.

Normally Shayna would be in New York, but due to the pandemic, she will spend the first year doing virtual learning. As with many things during this most unusual time, this has been a COVID silver lining for Temple Kol Ami. Temple Kol Ami was blessed to have Shayna serve as our cantor during the High Holidays, and her beautiful voice was uplifting and inspiring to all.

Shayna credits many amazing mentors who have modeled what she calls “impeccable examples of Jewish leadership.” She is grateful to Rabbi Murray Ezring, Cantor Elias Roochvarg, Rabbi Ana Bonnheim, and Congregant Attends Cantorial School (Continued on page 14)
Joyous Sukkot Comes to Life with Live Interaction at Chabad’s SukkahLand

How do you bring real joy to Charlotte youngsters in the age of COVID? Chabad of Charlotte has come up with an innovative solution. Create a self-contained, drive-through festival called SukkahLand.

On Tuesday October 6, the 4th day of the Sukkot holiday, scores of young people made their way to the Epstein Family Chabad Center campus on Sardis Road to find an outdoor sukkah-themed carnival filled with multiple colorful booths. The attractive event featured a life-sized board game loaded with holiday challenges, a Lulav & Etrog Bungee Run, edible Sukkah Crafts, Lulav Ring toss, Snacks in the Sukkah, and lots of fun.

All participants had the opportunity to enter into a sukkah and do the Lulav and Etrog Shake and enjoy some tasty Sukkot snacks. Revelers were also able to order a Kosher Hot-dog Dinner-to-Go, provided by Kosher Charlotte.

The idea was to bring the holiday spirit to Charlotte Jewish families in a tangible and exciting manner while following the social distancing and mask wearing protocol.

In addition, Chabad built four sukkah mobiles (Sukkot on wheels) and traversed the city, visiting Jewish families and elderly shut-ins, providing them with the opportunity to observe holiday rituals in comfort.

A unique Simchat Torah at home kit was put together by Chabad staff to bring the joy of this happy dancing holiday to all families celebrating at home.

The kit contained an inflatable Torah, a Simchat Torah flag, the story of Simchat Torah, a Torah-edible craft, a special holiday game, and a delicious sweet snack in the design of a Torah. A locally produced video, proclaiming that even at home you are not alone, was circulated prior to the holiday with a dancing Torah mascot and a rabbi dancing with the Torah. The message of the video is that all those celebrating at home are united with each of the millions of Jewish celebrants who are all celebrating at home.

JText for Teens 7-12th Grade

With teens being on their phones approximately 540 minutes a day, Jtext is a great way to meet them where they are. Teens can put their time on phones to good use by learning important Jewish facts with Jtext.

Every Monday and Thursday at 7 p.m., a Jewish trivia question is texted out. The seventh person to respond with the correct answer wins $20.

Signing up is simple: Text the word “CteenCLT” to 704-285-0737. The goal is to be the “7th person at 7 p.m.” to answer the trivia question correctly.

Jtext has featured a range of questions from “Which location celebrates the longest Shabbat?” to “Who were the first set of twins in the Torah?” to “Which country had the earliest settlement of Jews?”

Following the question, the text includes four multiple choice answers to choose from. Once they submit an answer, the teens immediately receive a response telling them if they are correct or not.

Teens compete with their friends and other teens in the Jtext program to be the seventh person to respond correctly. The competition is richer due to the $20 prize, but the mission of Jtext is twofold. It’s a great way to make some Amazon cash while learning about our important Jewish history.

Strive for 100

By Cantor Mary Rebecca Thomas, Temple Beth El

Quite a few years ago, I remember a fruit and vegetable marketing campaign that had the local grocery stores covered in signs that said, “Strive for Five.” Hanging from the ceiling — Strive for Five. On the refrigerator where they keep the lettuce — Strive for Five.

Over by the bulk bins — Strive for Five. As you moved through the aisles, filling your cart, sign after sign would remind you to try to eat five servings of produce each day.

As a young adult, I decided to strive for five. I quickly realized that I was not eating nearly enough fruits and vegetables most days and that if I wanted to get to five servings, not only would I need to add more fruits and vegetables to my life, I was also going to have to remove other less nutritious things to make room for all of that produce. All of those fruits and vegetables were crowding out other less optimal foods.

The Strive for Five experiment of my mid-twenties taught me that when we fill our baskets up with those things that help us, there is suddenly less room for that which does harm.

Sometimes we can crowd out habits we wish to change simply by adding healthier, better choices.

The Talmud teaches us that “A person is obligated to recite 100 blessings a day” (Menachot 43b). 100 blessings. Now, this teaching does not say that a person is obligated think 100 kind thoughts or say 100 prayers, but specifically to recite 100 blessings. 100 blessings, spoken aloud, uttered and brought into existence through our speech.

Some days, I do not talk much. On the spectrum of people who speak many words and those who speak very few, I am probably somewhere in the middle. So my daily expenditure of words is what it is, much like the room for calories ingested into a body in a day are quite finite. As we have the ability to choose if we eat enough fruits and vegetables, so too do we choose whether or not we breathe into existence enough words of blessing, encouragement, and affirmation.

Let us speak our blessings into being, filling our world with words of praise, and the hearts and minds of those we love with the very best we have to give. May these words, the expression of our hearts and minds, reach the Divine. Blessed are You, Adonai our God, who hearkens to our prayer.

We have the ability to choose the right balance of words of blessing, just as we choose the balance of what is in our shopping cart. The more we choose that which nourishes ourselves and others, the less room there is for that which causes harm.

What would happen if we flooded our speech with words of blessing? What if we walked outside, looked up, and proclaimed with awe, “Blessed are You, Creator of all, who has formed this Carolina blue sky?” Or breathed through a stressful moment and said the words, “Blessed are You, Source of Peace, who has given me the ability to bring a sense of calm to my family?” What if we sat at our socially distant dinner and said, “Dear friend, how blessed am I to know you and to have your trust?”

I believe that we would find that our lives change in the similar ways to when we eat enough fruits and vegetables.

We strive when we are filled with healthy fuel, and we thrive when we tend to the care of our souls. Speak words of blessing, words of care, and watch the light within you burn ever more brightly. That bright light, in turn, will inspire and nurture those we encounter.

As we prepare for Thanksgiving later this month, may we open our eyes to the blessings that surround us. Let us speak our blessings into being, filling our world with words of praise and the hearts and minds of those we love with the very best we have to give. May these words, the expression of our hearts and minds, reach the Divine. Blessed are You, Adonai our God, who hearkens to our prayer.

Please join us online for the MeckMIN 45th Annual Community-wide Interfaith Thanksgiving Service on Tuesday, November 24. The service is at 7 p.m. and is preceded by a 6:45 p.m. prelude. Hosted by Temple Beth El.
Content in the Tent

Rabbi Chanoch Oppenheim
Director, Charlotte Torah Center

Every synagogue in Charlotte had the same challenge this year; the Charlotte Torah Center (CTC) was no exception. We chose to have in-person High Holiday services, but how could we create a safe environment that could accommodate the crowd but at the same time have a setting that would make people feel comfortable? The solution was a tent and it was wonderful. People who had not been able to attend services since the outbreak the pandemic began calling to hear about the logistics and social distancing. It was wonderful to hear from people who said they would not be able to return until the end of the pandemic. The weather not only cooperated, but was also dreamlike — almost as if the heavens were cooperating with the program. During Neila, the powerful concluding service of Yom Kippur, it was a unique experience to be outdoors as the sun was setting. Due to the success of Rosh Ha Shanah and Yom Kippur, people asked if we could keep the tent up for Sukkot, and a few individuals happily stepped forward to cover any additional expenses. Once again, the sunshine, fresh air, and cool breeze made for a special experience as we shook our lulavim and etrogim. It occurred to me that perhaps a tent for Sukkot was particularly appropriate in light of the Haftarah we read on Sukkot.

It is fascinating how many groups and religions have some kind of tradition of an apocalyptic battle at the end of history, perhaps borrowed from the writings of the Jewish prophets. On the other hand, perhaps, being acutely aware of evil in the world and its overwhelming hold on mankind, they sense that nothing short of a major showdown between the forces of good and evil will end evil’s dominance over history once and for all. In our own times in which there is turmoil on the geo-political realm, it’s hard to see a bright future if things continue to unfold they have been.

The technical, Biblical term for this war is “The War of Gog and Magog.” The Haftarah read on the first day of Sukkot is from the prophet Zechariah and speaks about a time in the future when on Sukkot all external danger to the Jewish people and the State of Israel will be no more than a bad memory. The final war at that time will be the War of Gog and Magog, which will be on or near the holiday of Sukkot. After Magog’s defeat, the Jewish people will happily celebrate an eternal national peace.

Who Gog and Magog will be, whatever war they will wage at whatever time in history, and for however long it will last, its main purpose will be to test the spiritual and emotional fortitude of the Jews of that time because Gog and Magog might represent something more than merely a physical battle, it represents a Weltanschauung, a worldview. Rabbi S.R. Hirsch (Frankfurt, Germany; 1808-1888) notes that “Gog” is related to the Hebrew word for roof. A roof, with its ability to shut out the elements, rain and sun, symbolizes humankind’s imagined independence from G-d. The symbol of the roof stands in diametric opposition to the weak Sukkah booth. A sukkah, covered only by some meager branches, symbolizes our dependence on the Almighty. Thus, Gog’s struggle is the battle of the “roof” against the sukkah, in which those who believe only in human ability to manipulate nature try to eradicate the Jews, whose very existence loudly nullifies this worldview.

The pandemic has had an effect on the economy and health of virtually every part of the globe and we are still helpless in being able to defeat it. The world’s most talented and competent epidemiologists and doctors can’t provide the “roof” to protect us from this pandemic “rain.”

Being in the tent for the duration of the High Holidays, and especially during Sukkot, brought home this message more than ever. It was wonderful to sit outdoors and at the same time, it was an opportunity to remember from where our protection comes. Jews have been exposed to the elements for centuries and have survived against all odds. We even managed against all odds to return to our national homeland and build and incredible state, one which the BBC referred to as the “Miracle of the Mediterranean.” This year, High Holidays at the CTC were not only an encounter with nature and ourselves; we also thought about which “roof” we place our ultimate trust in.
Ruach in Action

By Rabbi Rachel Smookler

Sometimes we are prepared to be inspired by events and or people we come into contact with. I wasn’t prepared for the impact one 80-year-old woman would have on my life.

In my last few years serving as rabbi to Temple Beth David, a Conservative congregation in Rochester, New York, I had been shopping around for a tzedakah project that my congregants could easily get involved with and one that could strengthen our mission of social justice and aggregate needed a project that would be feasible of donating 100 lunch bags per month. My con discussion on an ongoing basis, we came up with the idea that participation could be made available for House of Mercy; her passion to help the poor was piercing.

Her phone was ringing off the hook as she took me on a tour of the shelter, where I met many of her clients and staff. Honoring the leaving the shelter, House of Mercy, which she founded in 1985. After she took me on a quick fact about ways in which my synagogue community could be involved. I was enraptured listening to her tell the story of how she founded House of Mercy; her passion to help the poor was piercing. Her phone was ringing off the hook as she took calls that helped connect those seeking shelter in House of Mercy with social services and medical aid.

Wow! The day I met with Sister Grace was supposed to be just a typical day on my calendar. I will never forget that day. In discussing realistic ways in which my congregation could participate in helping House of Mercy on an ongoing basis, we came up with the idea of donating 100 lunch bags per month. My congregation needed a project that would be feasible for all ages and one that would present the least amount of obstacles for engagement.

Of course, as time went on, this project was merely a springboard for the various ways in which we were able to contribute to House of Mercy.

Now I seek to bring the community lunch bag packing project to every city I move to. I have participated in feeding the hungry from my days as a rabbinical student in NYC to our years in Tokyo and Rochester and now, God willing, in Charlotte. Every community is different. Planning a tzedakah project for a brick-and-mortar congregation has its own challenges. Because The Ruach Community has gone virtual since the pandemic, we will be calling on our community members to participate through social media and emails. In organizing this lunch bag packing project, we will be putting out information on which items we will need, how to pack the bags, and where and when to drop off. This will all be communicated in the next few weeks as we transition our community mission into The Ruach in Action.

This new year, 5781, may we cultivate new ways to be both inspired and inspirational. So many of us are involved in independent tzedakah activities. However, when a community comes together in action, to repair even a small corner of our world, our communal heartbeat will vibrate high enough to reach the Divine Realm. Shana Tovah!

Temple Israel (formerly known as Sisterhood), and has served on the temple’s Board of Trustees. For years the congregation has been blessed with her voice as a member of the temple choir. Currently, she leads the support of families in times of bereavement by making sure they receive a shiva tray after the funeral.

In the greater community, Audrey has served on the board of the Blumenthal Jewish Home for the Aged (The Home), which is now called the Carolina Foundation of Jewish Seniors (CFJS), where she currently serves as a local advisor. Audrey established The Jerome Madans Award through CFJS, which honors her late husband, a longstanding board member. She has served as local president of both Hadassah and B’nai Brith, and has served on the Charlotte Community Affairs Advisory Committee and the Mecklenburg Nursing Home Advisory Board.

“I’m beyond shocked,” Audrey says of receiving the award. “I think it’s a great award and I’m not sure I’m the one who should be getting it, but I’m thrilled to death and totally surprised, and excited beyond belief!”

Honoring the life, accomplishments, and service of these distinguished individuals goes beyond temple affiliation. All are invited to attend (virtually) the concert and enjoy a musical evening of “Light & Celebration” on Sunday, December 6, 2020, at 5 p.m. The event will offer performances of American Songbook classics and uplifting Jewish music, featuring Cantor Shira Lissek along with other remarkable musicians. The event is co-chaired by Amy Udoff, a lifelong member of Temple Israel, and her father, Norman Shapiro. L’dor V’dor

By Craig Goldstein

L’dor V’dor, generation to generation, has always been a very important aspect of being Jewish. While there are differences between the various sects of Judaism, the thing that binds us together is the idea of L’dor V’dor. For many of us, especially Southern Jews, this idea connects us to the past, the present, and the future. Growing up in Charlotte and being a third-generation member of Temple Israel has meant that I have had the opportunity to witness and benefit from what the generations before me have accomplished to make our Kehillah strong.

Growing up, I could never understand why many of my elders and particularly members of my family sacrificed their time to make our community stronger. I remember countless times accompanying my grandfather (former cemetery director) and my father (former president) to the cemetery. Each of them instilled such a sense of pride in helping to maintain the oldest Jewish institution in the city. Eventually each of them would “retire” from working at the cemetery to allow new leaders to blossom. Years later, going to the cemetery with them, I could feel their pride when looking at all that had been accomplished.

Like many people, as I matured my priorities began to shift. Things I never thought would be important to me suddenly seemed urgent. How could I have an effect on our community, and what could I do to make it stronger? I was fortunate at the time to be asked to join the Bernstein Leadership Group and shortly thereafter was asked to join the Hebrew Cemetery Board. For me, it was the natural continuation of the L’dor V’dor mindset. I knew that if I could give half of the time and dedication my mishpacha had given to the cemetery, I could help ensure that this institution would continue to survive and thrive.

While not everyone has such a connection to local Jewish organizations, I implore everyone reading this article to begin thinking about what will be your legacy to our community and your family. Find your passion and create your own L’dor V’dor.

It doesn’t seem to matter what the occasion is or type of visit, the majority of my friends rarely come empty-handed and usually have a gift of some kind. It is not uncommon for my friends and I to start the sentence at the same time, “You don’t have to bring me a gift — you and your friendship are the gift!” We don’t want others to feel obligated. But sometimes a tangible gift is an opportunity for expression and to leave a tiny part of ourselves in someone’s life. To someone, a bundle of dandelion greens and ginger dressing might be just the right gift and can be more meaningful than a diamond. It strikes me that the monetary value has very little to do with the most impressive gifts.

There is text in Proverbs 25:11 that states, “A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in settings of silver.” What a powerful statement. It isn’t just the “what” — it is the “when,” too. It’s the encouraging word spoken to someone when they’ve just lost their pet, even if the speaker of those words didn’t know. It is special when we hear that small voice inside prompting us to call someone, but becomes a powerful act when we pick up the phone to let them know.

In Hebrew the word gift is matana, and in Yiddish the word is talant, which sounds so much like “talent” that we are reminded that meaningful giving may take practice, similar to developing a talent for playing piano by practice and repetition. The first time the word matana is mentioned in the Torah is Numbers 18:6, when it speaks of the Levites being given as a gift for the Lord to do the service of the Tent of Meeting. The tabernacle of Moses is an important part of our history because it housed the Shekinah Presence of Adonai where designated priests would enter on behalf of the Israelites. Because some believe that Adonai is now in our hearts instead of the Ark of the Covenant, one could reason that we are the ark carrying Adonai as a gift to each other. Just as joy is magnified and multiplied when shared, could we not believe that Adonai within us is even more important to share as a gift?

During the recent High Holy days, wonderful gift bags for break-the-fast filled with challah, wine, apples, honey, and cookies were assembled and delivered, along with a Yizkor booklet, on the morning of September 27, just before Erev Yom Kippur. During this time there is no such thing as a small gift. We have the gift of life, friendship, acceptance, respect, and kindness. Our hope is that when we give those gifts freely to others they will be multiplied.

Temple Solel holds regular Shabbat services at 7 p.m. on the second and fourth Fridays of each month via Zoom. We also have an abbreviated service on the first and third Fridays. Shayna Burak

Rabbi Bruce Aft, and her voice coach Jacqueline Culpepper for their guidance and support over the years. Additionally, Shayna thanks her Temple Kol Ami family for lifting her up as she pursues her dream and being there for her family in difficult times as well as good times. “I’m continually inspired and in awe of the passion and devotion to Judaism exhibited by Temple Kol Ami leaders and members,” she states.

Finally, Shayna thanks her parents (and sister Elana) for starting her on this journey 26 years ago by instilling in her their love for Judaism. They have been with her every step of the way and exemplify “l’dor v’dor” — from generation to generation — a pillar of Judaism that Shayna will now carry on.
Choosing the Right Program for Kindergarten

By Mariashi Groner, CJDS Director

There’s a lot of talk about the expectations placed upon children entering kindergarten. There are concerns that programs are too academic versus programs that are touted as being developmental. The two entry points to elementary school are through Transitional Kindergarten and Kindergarten. Charlotte Jewish Day School (CJDS) will offer both opportunities for the fall 2021-2022 school year.

The teaching in kindergarten should be guided and driven by what is developmentally appropriate for a specific age, understanding that the guidelines are not exact. Some children walk at 16 months, and some don’t walk until 17 months. It is not developmental versus academic, but rather it is about listening to the child and taking their individual developmental age into consideration.

Kindergarten expectation goals and standards have changed. Children today are exposed to experiences and learning opportunities at home and in preschool and are coming to us ready and eager to learn. They are little sponges ready to soak up the next stage of learning, and it would be a crime to withhold those experiences and opportunities because it was decided it would be developmentally inappropriate for a five-year-old. Likewise, if a child is not ready to grasp counting backwards or telling time, assessing them with unrealistic expectations would be inappropriate too.

A child’s chronological age is the age assigned upon birth, while their developmental age is the age of a child when they are compared to typical behaviors and characteristics associated with that child’s chronological age. Researchers have observed that chronological age is associated with a set of behaviors and skills. For example, a five-year-old might ask lots of how, what, where, and when questions. The child wants to please people and do things the right way; they show interest in new words and they frequently reverse letters and numbers when they write. These patterns lead us to understand a child’s developmental age. A child may be five years old, but the child may be four years five months developmentally, because they are demonstrating more behaviors that are characteristic of a four-year-old. Just the opposite can happen too.

No two children are alike. Even those of the same age in the same family experience growth and development at an individualized pace. Young children don’t all reach their developmental stages evenly and at the same time. All five-year-olds are not all emotionally, socially, and physically able to do the same things.

The developmental point of view requires that we view children as individuals and as whole beings. The physical, social, emotional, and intellectual aspects of development depend on and support each other and should advance in concert. The “readiness” for any task is based on the biological makeup of and the environmental influences on the child. Since we cannot produce, speed up, or ignore readiness, we must understand developmental ages and stages, which indicate where a child is on the developmental spectrum now, not where we think they should be. We can still have expectations for behavior or performance based on a sound understanding of what is appropriate.

It is important to understand that faster is not necessarily “better” and slower is not “bad.” The simple fact is that children develop at different rates. Few behaviors that are typical of an age. Each child is unique, bringing his or her own individual and special differences to the growth process.

To accommodate children who are not quite ready for the rigors of kindergarten, CJDS will roll out a Transitional Kindergarten (TK) program in the fall of 2021. An extra year. A gift for a child who needs to have a chance to allow their developmental growth to kick in so that they can take advantage of all the offerings that take place in the kindergarten classroom.

At CJDS, we ask some basic questions about a child’s maturity, developmental readiness, and ability to learn to help us, and you decide if a TK year is the best choice.

Has the child been exposed, to, taught, and offered opportunities to learn the letters or numbers, and still not able to demonstrate the knowledge?

Does the child show an interest in learning so that his/her attention span allows him/her to sit for a given amount of time to benefit from instruction and guidance?

Does the child have strong self-management skills? Will (Continued on page 16)
A Glimpse at the First Few Weeks at JPOS

We have been having such a great time at school! With creative ways to social distance and use materials differently to help stop the spread of germs, the students and staff have settled into the new routines beautifully. Check out some of the fun things we’ve been busy with!

Mila torah – each child has an assigned Torah to hug during Judaica!

Individual sensory play – Each child has an individual sensory bin. Emile is feeling fall objects.

Ben trike – We’ve been spending lots of time outside! Ben is filling his tricycle with gas.

Shabbat treat – Outdoor Shabbat party! Rabbi Groner shared a treat with each of us.

Outdoor Judaica – we’ve been using outdoor space for Judaica classes as well!

He or she struggle when the routines require putting the lunch-box in a basket and the folder in another basket? Does the child work independently? Some tasks in kindergarten require a child be able to listen to directions and able to follow through on a task without constant support.

Does the child make his or her own choices without teacher or parent interference? Has the child taken that step from “I need mommy or teacher to guide me through everything,” or does he or she now have a little more confidence to say, “I think I know the right thing to do this time?”

Does the child show willingness to try something new and is not apprehensive about new situations after a short adjustment period?

Does the child wait his or her turn in a group situation in play, during snacks, when sharing materials?

Does the child negotiate most of his or her own social problems fairly successfully?

Does the child express himself or herself well enough to communicate what he or she does and does not understand? Imagine when an assignment is given, and he/she doesn’t understand what to do, but just sits and does nothing.

Does the child have strong confidence and a healthy self-esteem? If a child is not developmentally ready, and the program offers challenges, the worry will be that the lack of success that child will experience, will negatively influence their self-esteem and confidence.

If your answers are not in the affirmative for several of these questions, TK may be a wonderful opportunity to give your child a little more time. Virtual Curriculum Night at Charlotte Jewish Preschool

By Becca Green, Director of Education

On October 1, the Charlotte Jewish Preschool (CJP) hosted our first-ever virtual curriculum night. We welcomed parents into our school from the comfort of their homes and they could learn about our early childhood curriculum and how it plays out in the classroom. Our goal was to provide a window into our mission to provide young children with a secure and loving atmosphere in which to grow, develop a positive self-image, and learn the joy of Jewish life. We believe students learn best when presented with a program that is multi-disciplinary, student-centered, and presented through a Jewish lens. Children learn best when they can explore, understand the world around them best through play and experiential learning. Our philosophy is inspired by various educational influences including, but not limited to, the Reggio Emilia approach.

We believe children are capable, competent, curious, have unique needs, and are worth the whole world. This idea is present in all that we do as educators and is evident in the way we present materials and maintain our space. We believe in offering open space, and appropriate materials, children are able to generate answers and develop their own ideas and constructs. Our job is to support these qualities and challenge children in appropriate ways to continue to develop to their fullest potential.

Our learning environments are of utmost importance. Our teachers are proud of the learning spaces they have created that have evolved into places of wonder. These environments reflect our values and beliefs about how children learn. We use open-ended materials that can be manipulated and used for limitless learning experiences. Open-ended materials do not limit the children or tell them what to learn or do. When given independence and the opportunity to create, our children thrive and gain confidence.

The environment also directly supports our Jewish values. Jewish education seeks to teach real-life values embodied who we are and how we operate at CJP from our youngest classroom to the board room. Our five core values, limud, kavod, b’tzelem Elohim, kehillah, and tikkun olam, serve as the foundation for the classrooms we do today to serve our children and families and direct us as we strive to be better for tomorrow. These values are woven through all aspects of our curriculum and daily life at CJP.

Students Return to Innovative Options

This past month, over 70 Jewish teens finally logged into Zoom after an almost six-month break. We are excited to have many teens engaging and learning in innovative and relevant classes. The first hour of Hebrew High is called Limmud. Students have the opportunity to create, our students thrive and gain confidence.

Students will be able to learn about their pets at home, they’re sharing about tzar ba’alei chayim, taking care of all of God’s creatures. When teachers create a unit on friendship, they’re teaching chaverut, the Jewish concept that goes deeper than simply having friends, but highlights the importance of how we treat our friends, how we honor and respect them, love and appreciate them, and truly value the special relationship.

There are times when Judaism is heated too. Do you some day wish you could exit this field. We are honored to have him. Many more Jewish values inspire our school than just those five. When students make ‘get well soon’ cards for sick friends, they’re practicing the Judaic value of bikkur chohelim, taking care of sick people. Even if they share stories about their pets at home, they’re sharing about tzar ba’alei chayim, taking care of all of God’s creatures. There are times when Judaism is heated too. Do you some day wish you could exit this field. We are honored to have him. Many more Jewish values inspire our school than just those five. When students make ‘get well soon’ cards for sick friends, they’re practicing the Judaic value of bikkur chohelim, taking care of sick people. Even if they share stories about their pets at home, they’re sharing about tzar ba’alei chayim, taking care of all of God’s creatures. When teachers create a unit on friendship, they’re teaching chaverut, the Jewish concept that goes deeper than simply having friends, but highlights the importance of how we treat our friends, how we honor and respect them, love and appreciate them, and truly value the special relationship.

The Anthropocene

“The Human Element” offers something unique in learning about climate science. It balances the study of the human causes of environmental change, especially climate change, with personal stories of people directly affected by those changes, along with scientists studying the problems. Through compelling scientific and visual evidence, viewers will learn how the Anthropocene, the current epoch of systemic human change in the environment, is affecting four foundational elements: earth, air, water, and fire.

The need for us to understand the Anthropocene is more urgent than ever. As of 2018, our global population is 7.6 billion people. By 2100, it will likely reach 11 billion. Our earth’s ballooning population exacerbates existing environmental problems, like the industrialization of agriculture, the burning of fossil fuels, continuing deforestation, and much more. As a result, humans are witnessing sustained warming temperatures, rising sea levels, compromised air quality, and more frequent occurrences of mega-storms and megafires. These events touch large swathes of the world’s population, and the U.S., the focus of “The Human Element,” is not immune.

“Climate protection is people protection,” says James Balog, the environmental photographer who is our guide throughout the film. Watching and sharing “The Human Element” is one achievable step toward fostering greater climate awareness and protection. This film is an accessible, highly engaging, and visually compelling resource that will help viewers expand their understanding of the Anthropocene.

Jewish tradition teaches the importance of caring for the environment, for we must act as partners in preserving creation. Bal Tashchit and Beyond: The Human Element

By Lisa Shpritz

“For thousands of years, many people believed that nature was made up of four elemental forces: earth, air, water, and fire. But I’ve come to realize there’s a fifth element — people. We are a force of nature, too. People are changing the other elements. At the same time, the elements are changing us.” (James Balog, “The Human Element”)

We invite you to join Shalom Green and the Levine Jewish Community Center on Tuesday, November 10 from 7-8:30 p.m. for a virtual screening of selections from “The Human Element” by James Balog. We will watch clips from the film and will host a discussion between environmental experts and community members. We will talk about how humans are affecting the four elemental forces of earth, air, water, and fire, why it is important for all of us to improve our climate science literacy, and how we can engage friends and family in conversations about climate change. Please register for the event by calling the LJCC Customer Service Desk at 704-366-5007.

Film Overview

Humans’ contributions to climate change can no longer be ignored or denied. The evidence is incontrovertible. For instance, multiple studies indicate that at least 97% of actively working climate scientists agree that climate change is happening and that it is at least partially caused by human activities. Visual evidence supports these scientific findings.

James Balog’s poignant environmental photographs and human portraits draw viewers in, facilitating immediate connections to our changing climate and how the consequences affect human lives. One goal of this film is to improve the viewers’ climate science literacy, defined as gaining the knowledge and competencies to understand how human actions influence the climate, how the climate influences individuals and society, and how humans can take action to reduce further climate change.

Effects of Climate Change

Increasing global air temperatures are melting glaciers and ice sheets. When ice melts, the water eventually runs off into the oceans, causing sea levels to rise. The oceans also absorb much of the heat from a warming atmosphere. This heating causes the water volume to expand and is currently contributing another 40% to sea-level rise. The average sea level around the world is rising three millimeters per year. With the rate at which the ice is melting and the atmosphere is warming, sea levels will rise 30 millimeters in a decade and 240 millimeters — 3/4 of a foot — in an average person’s lifetime. But steadily increasing air temperatures from the greenhouse effect and newly observed ice sheet breakdown in Antarctica mean that the rate of future sea-level rise will be even greater than the rate we see today.

“Innovate or Die”: BBYO Chooses Innovation

By Elaine Denenberg

In his recent biography, “The Ride of a Lifetime,” Robert Iger, CEO of Disney World described many factors that contributed to his successful career. One bit of advice that stood out was “innovate or die.” In these unchartered times, BBYO teens have done just that. Prior to the pandemic, many teens had participated in Zoom calls for leadership meetings but had not planned programs on the platform. The past few months have demonstrated how innovative our members can be. BBYO teens have created programs, held Shabbat and Havdalah services, and even hosted aBBYO teens have created programs, held Shabbat and Havdalah services, and even hosted a BBYO has also been able to begin in-person programming. These programs have been fun and engaging, even in small groups with masks and social distancing. Online they have cooked together and enjoyed trivia. In person they have practiced socially distanced yoga, played whiffle ball, had a spike ball tourney, met up for scoop night, and had an Ohagreen program. The Charlotte BBYO parents have been incredibly supportive. They communicated that their teens needed in-person programming and were quick to volunteer the use of their backyards and outdoor spaces. We are working to move to small indoor programs over the next few months. As always, this will be in accordance with NC and Foundation of Shalom Park guidelines.

BBYO is committed to having a safe, in-person summer in 2021. Camp dates are set, and our staff is already working hard to provide a safe and fun camp experience for all our members. Thanks to a very generous donor, 800 travel vouchers for $3,000 toward BBYO teen travel to Israel were made available to BBYO. They were going fast, but a few may be available. In addition to travel to Israel, BBYO is planning a full slate of domestic programs. CLTC, Chapter Leadership Training Camp, our premier leadership program for teens in 9th and 10th grade, will have five sessions next summer. ILTC, International Leadership Training Camp, which allows teens to further develop leadership abilities by learning to work as a team, building communication strategies and building relationships, all while enjoying classic camp activities, will be held in June for 10th and 11th graders. We will also offer International Aikidowhere teens can find their “Jewish self” through interactive sessions and conversations about a spectrum of Jewish topics in July. BBYO is excited to offer a new experience, Camp BBYO, for our younger members. This program is designed for members currently in 8th-10th grade who are looking for a super-fun week of camp activities with their friends. Camp BBYO will offer sports, Macabiah (color war), swimming, music, art, and more. For more information, check out all of the summer offerings at bbyo.org/summer. Early bird pricing runs through November 17, 2020. Regular pricing begins November 18, and scholarships are available. For more information about local programming or summer programs, you can reach out to charlotte@bbyo.org.

Moishe House Hosts Virtual Global Training Conference

By Maeve Ginsberg, Moishe House Communications Manager

On Sunday, September 13, Moishe House hosted its largest-ever global gathering, a virtual community builder training conference, referred to affectionately as “Couch Con 2020.” Over 400 Jewish young adults from 28 countries around the world came together over Zoom for learning, bonding, and celebrating.

“Who would have thought that we would do something of this nature virtually?” said David Cygielman, Moishe House’s Founder and CEO. “It has been a year of expanding our definition of community, and Couch Con once again redefined how Moishe House can build and foster connections. Though we couldn’t be together in person, now more than ever, uniting all community builders in one conference was all the more meaningful (and a big first). These moments of unity will carry us into the new year feeling reinvigorated and excited about what’s to come.”

Couch Con was a feat of creative scheduling and a whole lot of Zoom. It was amazing to unite everyone for an hour amidst their learning sessions for the All-Conference Event, which included David Cygielman’s annual organizational update, “State of the Moishe House,” the presentation of the Michael H.K. Cohen Award, and a few shofar blasts from Rabbi Brandon Bernstein, Moishe House’s director of Jewish Learning, to welcome the High Holidays.

The conference provided participants with the opportunity to learn from each other through over 50 peer- and staff-led learning sessions, including topics like: “Why Ask ‘Why?’: Making Judaism Relatable” and “What Did Your Country Teach You About Racism?,” “Turning Passion Into Action: Activating Your Community to Show Up for Tikkun Olam Programs” with Repair the World, and “Physically Distant, Globally Connected” with JDC Entwine, and many more.

During the conference, Moishe House announced the recipients of the third annual Michael H.K. Cohen Award and Travel Fellowship. Each year this award is presented to two Moishe House community builders who exhibit a passion for adventure and travel with warmth, kindness, curiosity, intelligence, and a love of Judaism — the special qualities that Cohen, the award’s namesake, brought to this world during his abbreviated life. Cohen was an active community member of Moishe Houses around the world. While living in Beijing, he was a frequent attendee of programs at Moishe House Beijing and member of the Kehilat Beijing Congregation. He forged close connections with Chinese and expat community members before returning to Boston and joining the Moishe House community in Cambridge. He died unexpectedly at age 28 in 2018.

The award and fellowship carries a travel stipend and allows the honorees to honor Cohen’s memory by exploring the world and engaging in new adventures. This year’s award recipients were Bari Beilinson, a current resident of Moishe House Atlanta, Virginia Highland, and Ellie Rudee, a Moishe House Without Walls (MHWow) host in Jerusalem, Israel. “I pray Michael’s memory continues to inspire others to give more of their time and devotion where it counts — by staying connected to others through the beauty of our Jewish culture … and to giving of themselves,” said Beilinson.

“We can all honor Michael by striving to do what he did so effortlessly — genuinely bring comfort to others … with light-heartedness and joy,” added Rudee. “If we build gatherings in that way, I promise that people will come, and more importantly, they will come back.”

JEWISH FAMILY SERVICES

Jewish Family Services – Answering the Call

By Louis Sinkoe, President, JFS Board of Directors

The Jewish New Year provided us with ample opportunity to pause and reflect upon our actions this past year. It was different this year in many ways, but still gave us that moment to look at our growth, mistakes, actions, goals, and dreams. Did we achieve what we wanted? Treat people as we had hoped? Perhaps one of the best parts of this contemplative time of year, along with the upcoming holidays dedicated to gratitude and miracles, is that we can choose to take what we learned through our introspection, adopt new resolutions and commitments, and round out the year in a state of deep-rooted appreciation. We can choose to look at what we do have instead of what we don’t.

As the president of the Board of Directors for Jewish Family Services (JFS), I wanted to share some of my observations, reflections, and things I am grateful for. I am proud to be a part of this sometimes-hidden gem of an organization. At JFS, it has been business as usual in that the hard work and tireless efforts never let up. JFS’s impact is felt far and wide, beyond Charlotte’s borders, reaching into many lives. So first I would like to thank each and every one of the staff for adapting, shifting, and bending in whatever direction is necessary to make sure our community gets what it needs. And so thankful we live where we do, in Charlotte, with a community like you. Thank you for always rising to the occasion, no matter what is asked, to support JFS so it can continue to strengthen and empower individuals and families in our community.

Upon further reflection, I get to see that it is during times like these, when our community is struggling the most, that the value of JFS can be seen most clearly. It’s on the ground helping people through this crisis, helping those struggling financially or with food insecurity, and helping those struggling with mental health challenges. Families who never expected to need help are now struggling, or will be, in the coming days, weeks, and months. It is comforting beyond measure to know that JFS is there to help.

JFS recently kicked off its Family to Family Annual Campaign. This year’s theme, “Answering the Call,” appropriately highlights JFS’s responsiveness during the pandemic and also speaking, JFS has set some big goals around what it anticipates will be increased demands. And while the way they deliver services looks different these days, and probably will look different for some time to come, they are committed to the same level of sensitivity and care to those in our community who are seeking its assistance.

New programs like providing iPADS to senior living communities help our seniors and Holocaust survivors remain connected to their loved ones, their doctors, and to programming they can no longer attend in person. The new Senior Connections newsletter, which has been so well received, helps those seniors unable to use technology to feel less isolated. Online workshops provide seniors and other members of the community with a space to share, engage their minds, and connect, during a time when they are feeling lonelier than ever.

Emotional support offered through one-on-one telehealth sessions, online support groups, and stress management programs, helps members of our community as they continuously adapt to what is referred to as the “new normal.”

And for those financially affected by the pandemic, JFS continues to implement the true meaning of tzedakah, by assisting those in need. Through their case management services and the food pantry, JFS is able to provide the stability and support for folks need to get back on their feet.

Together, as a community, we have always looked after our fellow neighbor and helped those who are struggling who, in many instances, cannot completely provide for themselves. JFS has been doing this work since 1980, and regardless of what is happening in the world today, we can have no plans of slowing down anytime soon.

If you or anyone you know is in need of services, please reach out; JFS can help. jfscharlotte.org, 704-364-6594 or email info@jfscharlotte.org.

Wishing you much health, peace and joy in the coming months and year ahead.

Sincerely,

Louis Sinkoe, President

COVID: Holidays and Your Emotional Health

By Howard Olshanksy
Executive Director, JFS

There has been an ongoing assumption that COVID has had a significant impact on our emotional health. It was natural to assume that anxiety and depression would increase and that being kept cooped up in the house would increase conflict and exacerbate symptoms for people with a history of having a mental health issue.

Recently a study conducted by the Centers for Disease Control has verified our worst fears. The study conducted in the last week of June found that 40% of the respondents indicated they had considered suicide at some point during the 30 days prior to the survey. Most significantly, the study found that the population most affected emotionally by the pandemic was our youth, ages 18 to 24, with close to half reporting symptoms of either depression or anxiety and more than 25% reporting they had considered suicide. More than 13% of the study’s participants reported increased use of drugs and alcohol.

Anna Mueller, a professor of sociology at Indiana University Bloomington, who conducts research on suicide, said CDC’s report shows that “breakdown in our society, the breakdown of the safety net, the breakdown of economic security is taking a massive toll. These breakdowns really show how crucial economic stability and economic security are to an individual’s well-being.”

In addition, Mueller said uncertainty may be contributing to the emotional struggles experienced by the 18- to 24-year-olds. “They’re watching their world crumble, and probably struggling to imagine a future,” she explained. “I mean, we all are. What is the world going to look like? What is college going to look like? What is employment going to look like if they were hoping to enter the labor force?”

Nadine Kaslow, a professor of psychiatry at the Emory University School of Medicine, said, “We need to check in with people, to see how they’re doing, to let people know that we care. People did a lot of that at the beginning.” She continued, “As we get into this phase that people sort of call the disillusionment phase, I personally think we’re seeing a lot less of that. We have to be in this for the long haul. We have to take care of each other for the long haul.”

Now, four months later, while some of our world has opened up, we are facing another emotional hurdle. As we embark on the end-of-year holidays, the pandemic will continue to exacerbate our mental health challenges. After living through Zoom seders and High Holiday services, and workarounds for Halloween trick-or-treating, we are now faced with making more adjustments to Thankgiving, Hanukkah, Christmas, and the New Year, provoking even more anxiety. Do we take the risk of traveling or struggling through another holiday without family?

Limited options for shopping in the upcoming season create additional challenges. In lieu of shopping in stores, many will turn to online shopping. And while online shopping is nothing new, there may be a tendency to overdo it, especially to compensate for not being able to physically celebrate together. For those living on a budget or with limited financial resources, there is the risk of overextending and going further into debt.

So how can you manage the pandemic, the holidays, and your mental health? Here are a few tips:

1. Hold a Zoom holiday dinner. I know you are Zoomed out! But being together, even electronically, will help you feel more connected than not being together at all. Keeping your traditions is important, so cook your traditional holiday meals. Host a socially distanced party if you have the space. Limit the number of guests, make sure you inform your guest of the parameters of your get-together. Limit the amount of alcohol, but don’t hold back on the entertainment!

2. Make and stick to a budget for gifts. If you are home and have time on your hands, make gifts for those who are close. When ordering online, consider personalized gifts.

3. Participate in online holiday events. Decorate your home. Create a festive environment at home. Exercise. Physical activity has a real impact on your emotional health.

4. Seek out a mindfulness or meditation class. Learning how to stay present and breathe can help if you find yourself especially stressed.

Lastly, if you can’t seem to shake the anxiety or depression, call Jewish Family Services for professional support.

New Book Helps us Age with Passion and Joy

Dr. Chuck Edwards of Charlotte, who has cared for so many in our community, has written a tender book whose title captures its theme: “Much Abides: A Survival Guide for Aging Lives.”

You might know Dr. Edwards, first as a cardiovascular surgeon and then as founder of Memory & Movement Charlotte. The nonprofit medical practice treats Parkinson’s, Alzheimer’s and other movement and memory disorders. His book encourages seniors to fill the last chapter of their story with passion and purpose. It promotes exercise, social interaction, and proper medicine. It considers the 10 common mistakes of aging. Number one is understimating how much time we have left. It shares how to cope with anxiety, and the importance of taking care of hearing loss and sleep apnea. Most of all, it invites seniors to pursue joy now while they have the time to do so. Did you play the piano as a child? Play again. Haunted by an old family wound? Reconcile with that loved one. Worried about mastering technology? Don’t!

Let the grandkids do it. “Much Abides” is inspirational, for as Dr. Edwards quotes the poet Alfred Lord Tennyson, “It is not too late to seek a newer world.”

“Much Abides: A Survival Guide for Aging Lives” is $25. Sales support Memory & Movement Charlotte. You can purchase a copy by contacting the Center at 704-577-3186, email@mmclt.org or www.mmclt.org. It is also for sale at Park Road Books and Traditions, both at Park Road Shopping Center, and through Amazon.

Perspectives on Holocaust Education: Two Studies Reveal Successes and Concerns

By Talli Dippold
Associate Director, Stan Greenspon Center for Peace and Social Justice at Queens University of Charlotte

In the past month, two renowned Holocaust organizations, Echoes & Reflections and the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany (Claims Conference), published outcomes of national surveys on Holocaust education. Their divergent findings created clamor on social media and controversy among leaders of Holocaust organizations. Is Holocaust education a lost cause or a critical component to an academic curriculum? What can be done to increase knowledge of the Holocaust? And more important, what are the most essential elements of an effective lesson?

Over the past decade, alarming headlines surrounding lack of knowledge about the Holocaust have regularly resurfaced. In considering these two most recent studies, we can learn critical lessons for training educators, especially in this era when the number of living survivors available to share their testimony is rapidly dwindling.

Here’s a breakdown of the findings that that can guide Holocaust educational organizations.

Echoes & Reflections, an organization that supports educators in teaching about the Holocaust, sought through its U.S. College Survey to explore the relationship between exposure to Holocaust education in high school and subsequent student attitudes, beliefs, and behaviors. The national survey of 1,500 post-secondary U.S. college students ages 18-24 measured attributes related to Holocaust knowledge and understanding, critical thinking skills, empathy, respect, and tolerance for different viewpoints, and willingness and motivation to be an upstander. The report findings state, “The results are encouraging. They indicate that positive outcomes of Holocaust education not only reflect gains in historical knowledge but also manifest in cultivating more empathetic, tolerant, understanding, critical thinking skills, empathy, respect, and motivation to be an upstander. The report findings state, “The results are encouraging. They indicate that positive outcomes of Holocaust education not only reflect gains in historical knowledge but also manifest in cultivating more empathetic, tolerant, understanding, critical thinking skills, empathy, respect, and motivation to be an upstander.”

Alarmingly, the Claims Conference’s Holocaust Knowledge and Awareness Study, which surveyed 1,350 American adults, found a significant lack of Holocaust knowledge in the United States. It revealed that of the 40,000 camps and ghettos that existed during the Holocaust, 49% of millennials cannot name a single one. The study also found that nearly one-third of all Americans and more than four in ten millennials believe that substantially fewer than six million Jews were killed (two million or fewer) during the Holocaust. But it also found that there is a strong belief in the importance of Holocaust education in school for all students so that history does not repeat itself. About the study, Executive Vice President Greg Schneider says, “This study underscores the importance of Holocaust education in our schools. There remain troubling gaps in Holocaust awareness while survivors are still with us; imagine when there are no longer survivors here to tell their stories. We must be committed to ensuring the horrors of the Holocaust and the memory of those who suffered so greatly are remembered, told, and taught by future generations.”

Both studies conclude that Holocaust education is critical — even more so as the survivor population decreases. The Echoes survey highlights the success of using survivor testimony. However, the Echoes survey targeted individuals who received Holocaust education during their recent high school experience, while the Claims survey assessed individuals whose Holocaust education may have been decades earlier. The Echoes survey assesses the impact of Holocaust education on students beyond the basic facts, evaluating the effect of this education on their daily lives. The Claims survey assessed the retention of factual information, not the impact of that knowledge.

As Holocaust educators, our goal must extend beyond the memorization of numbers, names, years, and countries. While recalling facts has value, the greater goal of Holocaust education must be to cultivate empathy, a willingness to be an “upstander,” motivate action against hate and prejudice, and foster respect for differences.

This is good news for the multitude of strong organizations that support Holocaust education ranging from educational institutions to museums (including our own Stan Greenspon Center for Peace and Social Justice) and for the 15 U.S. states mandating Holocaust Education.

These outcomes bring me back to my first day of my graduate program in Holocaust Studies. The professor focused the first full hour of our valuable time together discussing the why of Holocaust education. “If you don’t understand the why,” she stated, “nothing else makes sense.”

Schwarma Chicken Kabobs

(From the Nosher via JTA)

This recipe is perfectly spiced, quick to make and oh-so-juicy. If you think chicken kebabs sound boring, I don’t blame you. Usually, they are. And dry. But not this recipe. This recipe pays homage to one of the earliest forms of cooking: roasting meat on a spit over a fire. Roasting smaller cuts, like kebabs, became popular in areas like the Middle East where firewood was scarce, as they proved more practical to cook over small fires. According to food historian Gil Marks, the word is derived from the ancient Persian “kabab,” which most likely stemmed from Aramaic.

Today, their popularity holds firm. Shish taouk, kebabs of marinated, spiced chicken, are enjoyed in Egypt, Syria, Turkey, and Jordan. In Iran, kebab koo-bideh, kebabs of ground meat mixed with parsley and chopped onions, are served alongside rice and yogurt. In Israel, kebabs of spiced ground meat are ubiquitous at holiday barbecues. Shwarma, while not exactly a kebab, is probably the most internationally beloved example of spit-roasted meat. Its flavorings — cumin, turmeric, and coriander — inspire these kebabs. Bright with lime and onion, and made with juicy chicken thighs instead of breasts, they take mere minutes to cook on a hot grill (you could do this on a grill pan, too). Plus, they’re so versatile: delicious with rice, perfect with warm laffa bread and hummus, and refreshing when offset by tzatziki, tahini, or even bright arils of pomegranate.

If you have leftovers, un-skewer them and toss with greens, olives, hummus, tomatoes, red onion, and good olive oil for a perfect lunch.

Ingredients

For the kebabs:
- 4 or 5 oz. skinless, boneless chicken thighs, trimmed of excess fat and cut into 1/2” cubes
- 1/4 cup olive oil
- 1/2 tsp ground cumin
- 1 tsp ground black pepper
- 1 tsp ground turmeric
- 1 tsp sea salt
- 1/2 tsp smoked paprika
- 3/4 tsp garlic powder
- 3/4 tsp ground coriander

To serve:
- parsley
- lime wedges
- thinly sliced red onion
- hummus
- laffa bread

Directions

Combine the spices in a bowl. Add the cubed chicken and olive oil, and mix well to combine. Cover and refrigerate for a minimum of 30 minutes, and up to 12 hours. The longer it marinates, the tastier it’ll be.

Take 12-15 wooden or metal skewers. If you’re using wood skewers, soak them for half an hour so they don’t burn and catch fire on the grill. Thread the marinated chicken onto the skewers — I like to thread them longways so there’s more surface area to grill.

Preheat the grill to medium-high heat and grease it by dipping a few paper towels in vegetable oil, and using them to rub carefully over the grates until glossy.

Place the kebabs on the grill and cook until golden brown, around 5-6 minutes per side. Use tongs to turn them. They should be charred in places.

Transfer to a platter and scatter with parsley and sliced red onion. Squeeze with fresh lime. Serve with warm laffa bread and hummus.

Ushpizin During COVID Meant Delivering Food to Refugees

By Amy Lefkof

Sukkot was celebrated in a very special way on October 6 at the outdoor Camp Mindy Pavilion, when Temple Israel’s new Senior Rabbi Michael Wolk joined a group of 16 volunteers from the Jewish Community Refugee Initiative to assist local refugee families during Covid. The group of volunteers filled 100 donated reusable Publix grocery bags with hundreds of pounds of fresh produce, non-perishables such as flour and sugar, and other kitchen supplies, with an Impact and Innovation Grant from the Jewish Federation of Greater Charlotte.

Addressing the group, Rabbi Wolk explained the significance of doing this mitzvah for refugees during Sukkot. When the Jewish people made their exodus from Egypt, they were refugees — strangers in the land of Egypt who, escaping persecution, had to travel for 40 years before they made their way to the Land of Israel. He then explained ushpizin — the custom of inviting our ancestors to join us in the sukkah. These spiritual guests remind us that we should always have enough food in the sukkah not only to share with our family and friends, but also enough to share with the stranger, the orphan, and other unfortunate people who don’t have enough to eat and drink.

Given that during the pandemic we cannot invite guests or strangers to our sukkah for food and drink, it is fitting, said Rabbi Wolk, that we use the opportunity of Sukkot to assemble Covid relief bags for Charlotte refugee families.

On October 7, the 100 bags were delivered to Refugee Support Services where a drive-through sukkah was supported by masked and socially distanced volunteers. Each bag included a Statue of Liberty welcome postcard inscribed by members of the Charlotte Jewish community, mostly senior citizens, welcoming the refugees to Charlotte, given that the Jewish people know what it is to be strangers in strange lands.

Student to Student

The Stan Greenspon Center for Peace and Social Justice is pleased to announce a new program: Student to Student High School Peer Education Program

What?

Student to Student is a national-wide program that seeks to fight against antisemitism and prejudice in high school students. It was developed by the Jewish Community Relations Council of St. Louis. It helps young people put a “human face” to Judaism—the best antidote to bigotry and intolerance.

When?

The program will launch in Winter 2020 and will be conducted virtually. Charlotte will be the ninth city to launch this program and be first in the southeast.

How?

Student presenters (high school juniors and seniors), will speak about a range of topics including, but not limited to: the Sabra — the Jewish life cycle from birth to Bar/Bat Mitzvah to marriage to death, antisemitism and the Holocaust, Israel, the Hebrew language, Jewish dietary practices, and Jewish holidays. They will each share from their denominational perspective (e.g., Conservative, Orthodox and Reform).

For information about becoming a Student to Student participant, please email Talli Dippold at talli.dippold@queens.edu. To schedule a presentation, please email Donna Tarney at tarneyd@queens.edu.

This program is generously sponsored by the Jewish Federation of Greater Charlotte.

Looking Back

Newspaper archives are a treasure trove of collective memories and experiences, providing a snapshot of our history. The Charlotte Jewish News has been in print since 1979, providing a nearly bottomless opportunity to delve into the history of the greater Charlotte Jewish community. The following is a reprint of the headline from CJN November 2005.

Join us for the Grand Opening of “Main Street” and the Sam Lerner Cultural Arts Center, November 30

November, 2005

A special event for the entire community will be held on Wednesday evening November 30 — some of the most exciting new facilities in Shalom Park will be opened and dedicated. Recently completed as part of the final phase of construction are the new entrance and “Main Street” of Shalom Park. After walking through the architecturally innovative rotunda, you enter the open and attractive lobby that provides immediate access to the entrance to the Sandra and Leon Levine JCC. From there, you may also enter “Main Street” of Shalom Park which includes the offices of the Charlotte Jewish Federation and of the Levine JCC.

One of the special features of this phase is the Sam Lerner Center for Cultural Arts, a versatile 4000 square foot facility that will be the location for the November 30 event and many exciting cultural and community events for years to come. This new facility is dedicated to the memory of Sam Lerner, one of the founders of Shalom Park, and was made possible by generous contribution of his family and many friends. Adding to the uniqueness of the evening will be the presence of Eli Evans, critically acclaimed author of “The Provinceals,” which Pat Conroy has described as the “seminal, indispensable book about the Jewish experience in the South... One of a kind, a masterpiece.” In language that inspired Abba Eban to declare, “The Jews of the South have found their poet laureate,” Evans sifts through the sweeping changes in the New South that have transformed the lives of Southern Jews over the last thirty years. The theme of Evan’s November 30 address, entitled “Judaism in the South — Alive and Unfolding,” is fitting for this unique event given Shalom Park’s uniqueness as a modern landmark for Jews in the South. Eli has many friends in Charlotte and throughout North Carolina, having grown up in Durham, North Carolina. After attending UNC and then Yale Law School, Evans’s accomplishments include serving as a White House speechwriter for Lyndon B. Johnson and serving as the president of Revson Foundation. Also included in this phase of Shalom Park’s expansion are the Levine JCC’s new Senior Center and Family Place — each promising to be sites for meaningful programs for seniors and families. Finally, this phase will include the Luski board room, which will be available to all Shalom Park agencies and a donor board recognizing the generosity of approximately 1000 donors who have made Shalom Park’s Campaign to Expand and Enliven Shalom Park a resounding success. The entire community is invited to this special event which will begin at 7:30, a reception and book signing by Eli Evans will follow.
