Google Maps' Accessible Routes Help Wheelchair Users Plan Travel

A recent improvement to Google Maps has made travel a little bit easier for people who use wheelchairs to get around. On March 15, 2018, Google posted the following message on its blog site, "The Key Word."

"To make public transit work for everyone, today we're introducing "wheelchair accessible" routes in transit navigation to make getting around easier for those with mobility needs."

The new feature launched in London, New York, Tokyo, Mexico City, Boston, and Sydney on March 15, but Google hopes to make it available to other cities in the coming months.

In order to gather information about accessible routes, Google assembled 200 meet-ups around the globe. At the meet-ups, local guides (Google content contributors) provided feedback on accessibility on more than 12 million locations. Google says it is also in the process of "capturing and updating street view imagery of transit stations and city centers so people can preview a place or transit station ahead of time."

To use Google Maps' wheelchair accessible routes feature:

"Type your desired destination into Google Maps. Tap "Directions" then select the public transportation icon. Then tap "Options" and under the Routes section, you'll find "wheelchair accessible" as a new route type. When you select this option, Google Maps will show you a list of possible routes that take mobility needs into consideration."
