Psychopharmacologic Treatment of Serious Mental Illness: An Update

Dr. Cam Quanbeck and Dr. Karin Hastik

Join us for the latest on the new long-acting injectable anti-psychotics and their role in preventing relapse (saving overall cost), the new Clozapine REMS monitoring guidelines, genetic discoveries underlying serious mental illness - including pharmacodynamic/pharmacokinetic testing which recently became available, and the role of neuroinflammation in serious mental illness. Also to be discussed is the role of vitamin and dietary supplementation as they can effectively augment psychotropic medications and further reduce depressive symptoms.

AOT Services Launched July 1st
Together Towards Recovery

Developed out of the San Mateo County’s adoption of Laura’s Law (Assembly Bill 1421) in the summer of 2015, the Assisted Outpatient Treatment (AOT) is a program that reaches out to people with a severe mental illness who are not connected to services and are challenged with living safely and stably in our community.

The AOT team works collaboratively with individuals, their family members and partners to provide the right care at the right place and time. Our dedicated team helps decrease mental health crises, hospitalizations, incarceration and homelessness while helping people achieve and maintain their physical and mental health.

SMC’s AOT outreaches to people who are not connected to treatment and engages them in services provided by Caminar’s Full Service Partnership (FSP), a community based program which provides intensive mental health services. The program includes 24/7 care and services such as intensive case management, psychiatry, medication management, benefit and housing support, life skill development, as well as guidance and support to help people reach their recovery goals.

San Mateo County joins other Bay Area counties, including San Francisco and Contra Costa, and over a dozen other counties throughout the state in implementing Laura’s Law and the AOT. Through this early implementation in other counties, Assisted Outpatient Treatment has been shown to:

• save lives
• reduce homelessness, hospitalizations, crime, arrests, and incarceration
• help families and reduce caregiver stress
• save money on arrests, incarcerations, and hospitalizations

Eligibility
A person must meet all of these conditions to be eligible for AOT: Have a history of not following through with treatment for their mental illness resulting in:

• Being hospitalized and/or incarcerated two or more times within the last 3 years.
• Or, having threatened or attempted a significantly dangerous behavior towards themselves or others at least one time in the past 2 years.
• Were previously offered treatment on a voluntary basis and refused it, and whose health is quickly declining.

To make a referral, call 650-372-6125 or email AOT@smc.gov.org. Learn more about San Mateo County’s AOT process and team at: www.smchealth.org/AOT.

Progress On Parity For Persons With SMI
By Ron Manderscheid, PhD, Executive Director, NACBHDD and NARMH | Behavioral Healthcare, 7/5/16

Parity again is at the forefront of our consciousness. Now, it produces feelings of apprehension rather than feelings of a job well done. After eight years, we still are left wondering what has changed. Clearly, many of the hoped for advances in behavioral health insurance benefits and their management have yet to arrive on the scene.

Symptoms of this apprehension abound. President Obama has just created a Parity Task Force, which is due to report to him in October. (See my testimony to the Task Force and my related blog). Research shows that people seeking health insurance do not understand parity. And former representative Patrick Kennedy and the Coalition for Whole Health are on an important crusade asking the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to enforce the federal parity laws….

Recently, John Bartlett and I have examined the impact of parity on the care of persons with serious mental illness (SMI). We were invited to do this analysis because so little has been written on the topic. We examined the impact of changes over the period 2008-2016. However, we acknowledge that many of the advances made in the care of adults with SMI have been slow and incremental over the past 50 years.

Total Wellness

Total Wellness (TW), a specialty program under Behavioral Health and Recovery Services, aims to improve health outcomes and promote wellness for adult individuals who have both chronic behavioral health and physical health conditions. TW provides integrated physical behavioral health services through its three major, inter-connected components: 1) linkage to and timely access to primary care and specialty medical care services; 2) comprehensive care coordination by behavioral health nurse care managers; and 3) provision of an array of stage-based wellness recovery services offered in individual and group formats.

Studies have shown that individuals with mental health and/or substance use issues die an average of 25 years earlier than their peers as a result of preventable chronic physical health conditions, such as diabetes, hypertension, hyperlipidemia, obesity, and smoking.

Total Wellness conducts weekly clinical team huddles with Primary Care Providers of Mental Health Primary Care (MHPC) team to coordinate a whole person’s care plan and to address any outstanding behavioral health and medical issues. See our brochures for more info: Client – (English, Spanish), Eligibility Criteria:
1) Existing clients of BHRS and its specialty and contract programs;
2) Clients with or without a County Primary Care Provider (i.e. clients with private primary care providers will not be eligible).

Mental Health Reform Bill Overwhelmingly Clears House of Representatives

A bill that would majorly reform mental health care in the United States cleared the U.S. House of Representatives 422-2 on July 6. Now, legislators are calling for the immediate passage of a similar bill in the Senate.

The Helping Families in Mental Health Crisis Act, introduced by Rep. Tim Murphy (R-PA), a licensed child psychologist, would potentially address a nationwide shortage of psychiatric beds and child psychiatrists, in addition to creating the federal position of assistant secretary for mental health and substance use disorders, to be filled by a licensed psychiatrist or psychologist and take over the responsibilities of the administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration.

“This historic vote closes a tragic chapter in our nation’s treatment of serious mental illness and welcomes a new dawn of help and hope,” Murphy said in a news release Wednesday. “We are ending the era of stigma. Mental illness is no longer a joke, considered a moral defect and a reason to throw people in jail.”

The bill, first introduced in 2013 following the shooting at the Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Connecticut, hosts 207 bipartisan cosponsors. It was unanimously approved by the Energy and Commerce Committee last month. Following the bill’s House approval, U.S. Senators Chris Murphy (D-Conn.) and Bill Cassidy (R-La.), co-authors of the similar Mental Health Reform Act, which also has bipartisan support, called on the Senate to vote on their bill. They said in a joint statement Wednesday that the House bill “isn’t perfect, but the fact that it passed overwhelmingly is proof that there’s broad, bipartisan support for fixing our broken mental health system.”

The American Psychiatric Association is urging that The Helping Families in Mental Health Crisis Act be approved by the Senate before the end of the year, though the organization said in a statement Wednesday that it endorses both the House and Senate measures.

Show Me All Your Scars: True Stories of Living with Mental Illness by Lee Gutkind (Editor), Patrick J. Kennedy (Introduction), Dr. Karen Wolk Feinstein

Every year, one in four American adults suffers from a diagnosable mental health disorder. In these true stories, writers and their loved ones struggle as their worlds are upended. Addressing bipolar disorder, OCD, trichillomania, self-harm, PTSD, and other diagnoses, these stories vividly depict the difficulties and sorrows—and sometimes, too, the unexpected and surprising rewards—of living with mental illness.

Surviving Mental Illness Through Humor by Alyson Herzig and Jessica Azar

Surviving Mental Illness Through Humor contains stories of hope, despair, and hilarity by writers who are walking the mental health journey, as they discuss their experiences with depression, anxiety, bipolar disorder, anorexia, agoraphobia, panic disorder and more. Join us as we ‘laugh stigma into submission’ by growing attitudes of acceptance and compassion.

10 Male Celebrities Who Are Smashing Mental Health Stereotypes
Lindsay Holmes Deputy Healthy Living Editor, The Huffington Post 6/26

Nearly 6 million American men suffer from depression each year, yet many of them avoid seeking treatment. A 2015 analysis also found that men are more likely not to speak up if they’re having suicidal thoughts. This aversion to support is likely due to the negative stereotypes surrounding mental illness and, when it comes to men, a (very incorrect) notion that mental health issues are “weak” and not masculine.

But more than a handful of celebrities are changing that. Take a look at some of these mental health advocates below. Not only do they slam the idea that mental health issues are something to be ashamed of, they’re actively reversing the idea that men who speak about them aren’t “tough.” If you ask us, that’s pretty brave.

Zayn Malik. The singer recently canceled his appearance at the Capital Summertime Ball in the U.K. due to issues from anxiety. Malik explained his condition in a Twitter and Instagram post, apologizing to his fans. “Unfortunately, my anxiety that has haunted me throughout the last few months around live performances has gotten the better of me,” he wrote in the statement. “With the magnitude of the event, I have suffered the worst anxiety of my career.”

Wayne Brady. After the death of actor Robin Williams in 2014, Brady opened up about the stigma around mental illness and his own experience with it to Entertainment Tonight. “It took me a while to get my stuff together to go, ‘You know what? If you’re not happy, you have to do something about it,’” he said. “Just to admit that you are feeling this way is a huge step. To claim that, to say, ‘Why do I feel dark? Why do I feel unhappy? Let me do something about this.’”

Bill Clinton. Clinton advocated for better mental health policies when he was president, slamming the negative stereotypes surrounding the conditions during a radio address in 1999. “Mental illness is nothing to be ashamed of, but stigma and bias shame us all,” he stated.

Howie Mandel. The comedian and TV show host has been honest in interviews about his experience with obsessive compulsive disorder and why it’s important to seek therapy for the condition. “We take care of our dental health. We don’t take care of our mental health,” he told CNN. “I think the solution to making this world better is if we would just be healthy, mentally.”

Jon Hamm. Hamm told U.K. magazine The Observer that treatment and medication allowed him to manage his mental health issues. “I did do therapy and antidepressants for a brief period, which helped me,” he said. “Which is what therapy does: it gives you another perspective when you are so lost in your own spiral... It helps.”

Brandon Marshall. The Jets wide receiver hasn’t been shy about advocating for mental health through his initiative Project 375. He also opened up about his own experience with borderline personality disorder in a HuffPost blog. “We need to accept that mental illness is a disease — and like any other disease, it needs stronger research, early screening and treatment, especially for young people,” he wrote.

John Green. The Fault In Our Stars author has previously tweeted about his personal experience with an anxiety disorder and also touted the benefits of seeking support when dealing with a mental health condition. “There is hope. There is treatment,” he wrote to a fan in a Reddit AMA. “You are not alone, and while I know the struggle feels at times completely hopeless and futile, there is a far shore for the vast majority of people, and I wish you the best.”

Jared Padalecki. The actor told Variety magazine that he struggled with depression for many years. He shared an encouraging message with his fans going through the same experiences in the interview. “I say constantly that there’s no shame in dealing with these things,” Padalecki told the magazine. “There’s no shame in having to fight every day, but fighting every day, and presumably, if you’re still alive to hear these words or read this interview, then you are winning your war. You’re here.”

Reid Ewing. The “Modern Family” actor discussed his issues with body dysmorphia, a condition where a person obsesses over their physical looks, in a HuffPost blog. He also explained his history with eating disorders and his addiction to cosmetic surgery. “In my case, my looks were the only thing that mattered to me,” he wrote. “I had just moved to LA to become an actor and had very few, if any, friends. I’d sit alone in my apartment and take pictures of myself from every angle, analyzing every feature.”

Dwayne Johnson. Johnson discussed his experience with depression on Oprah’s “Master Class,” where he explained how he learned the important lesson that he wasn’t alone. He also shared a message with others who were dealing with a mental health issue. “Have faith that on the other side of your pain is something good,” he said.
