CIT and PERT

Jason Albertson,
LCSW  San Mateo County BHRS
and
Jim Coffman,
Detective, San Mateo County Sheriff

The Psychiatric Emergency Response Team is an innovative, cooperative approach to provide followup and a linkage to care for people who come to attention of law enforcement in unincorporated San Mateo County and areas that contract with the Sheriff for police services. One of the first cop/clinician teams in Northern California, PERT goals include attempting to reduce risk in order to prevent tragic outcomes. Jason and Jim will detail their program and explain how CIT in San Mateo County evolved into PERT.

Laura’s Law Adopted in San Mateo County

The Board of Supervisors approved the implementation of Laura’s Law in June 2015, which provides for an adult living with a serious mental illness to be referred to the court for consideration of a court order for Assisted Outpatient Treatment. Eligibility criteria includes: 1) unable to “survive safely” in the community without “supervision” 2) has a history of “lack of compliance with treatment” as evidenced by at least one of the following: a) been hospitalized/incarcerated two or more times in the last 36 months due to mental illness or b) demonstrated violent behavior towards self or others in the last 48 months, 3) has been offered treatment on a voluntary basis and refused it, and 4) is “deteriorating.”

Terry Wilcox-Rittgers, Clinical Services Manager II, has been selected to lead the development and implementation of “Laura’s Law” with an expected start date in the spring.

Election of Officers / Annual Meeting

In accordance with the NAMI San Mateo County bylaws, our annual election of officers will take place at the March 23, 2016 General Meeting. We are looking for additional board members, including a Treasurer and Secretary. If you are interested in a position or wish to suggest someone, please contact the office at nami@namisanmateo.org or 650-638-0800.

Nominations will be will be accepted at our office and posted on our website at the beginning of March. Installation of officers will take place at the April board meeting, following the election in March.

Support NAMI SMC Through Legacy and Planned Giving

To help ensure that NAMI San Mateo – and all of our programming – remains viable and financially sound for generations to come, we encourage our members and friends of all ages to consider a legacy gift to us.

Legacy gifts come in all shapes and sizes – not just in five or six figures! The most popular gift is a bequest in your will or living trust. You may designate a specific amount or piece of property, stocks/shares in a company, a percentage of your estate or the remainder of your estate. If you already have a will, bequests may be added with a simple amendment or codicil. Please contact your attorney for more information.

The inclusion of a legacy or planned giving gift in your will allows you to further provide for the organization that holds a special place in your heart. If you are considering such a donation, please contact Helene Zimmerman, NAMI SMC Executive Director at execdirector@namisanmateo.org.

Update On New California Law To Improve Mental Healthcare Intervention

Passage of AB 1194: Clarifies that the 5150 statute is not restricted to only imminent danger, and requires that psychiatric history and input of families is to be taken into account.

New! Patient Education Library

NAMI San Mateo is pleased to offer a new Patient Education Library, see http://namisanmateo.org/health-library.

The patient education content covers a wide range of topics, including ADHD, Alcoholism, Autism, Anxiety Disorders, Bipolar Disorder, Depression, Personality Disorders, Schizophrenia and more. The content is derived from trusted, non-commercial sources, such as the National Institutes of Mental Health, and include links to NAMI resources.

The Health Library content can be printed by website visitors at home and shared on social media.

This free, advertising-free service is provided by Vivacare, a patient education company. Mark Becker, M.D., the founder of Vivacare is a pediatrician with extensive experience in providing web-based services for the medical field.

Vivacare's proprietary content management system integrates content from a variety of trusted sources into a unified, patient-friendly format for use by selected medical professionals in the delivery of patient care.

The Vivacare management team is experienced developing a wide range of patient education programs on behalf of health care organizations – including : NAPNAP, Tremor Action Network, National Eczema Association, National Rosacea Association as well as many others.

Vivacare is committed to helping medical professionals and health care organization educate and support their patients.

We hope you find this new feature to be helpful!

Congrats to Recent Grads of NAMI SMC Programs!

In Our Own Voice Graduates
It is with much pleasure that NAMI SMC has nine new In Our Own Voice presenters that will enable us to expand our outreach capabilities. The new presenters are: Gilbert Cavallini, Alan Cochran, May Chen, Rocio Cornejo, Christina Innes, Dan Hibson, Gina Olinger and Tad Randall. Congratulations graduates!

Peer to Peer Graduates
After 10 weeks of hard work and perseverance, nine individuals graduated from the Winter 2015 NAMI SMC Peer to Peer class. Join me in congratulating the graduates for their resilience, commitment to the class and their fortitude!

5 Discussions from National Council for Behavioral Health

One of the most rewarding parts of my job is the opportunity to engage with the staff of member organizations and the people treated by those organizations. When traveling around the country, I truly look forward to the conversations we have. Another way I try to engage is with written conversations — offering new information and points of view — and sometimes that can mean uncomfortable conversations.

And while it remains to be seen what 2016 will hold, we’ve put together an Out and In List http://www.thenationalcouncil.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/InOutList.pdf that shares where we think the coming year will take us. Be sure to tell us what you think will be most talked about in 2016.

Happy New Year from all of us at the National Council.

President and CEO, National Council for Behavioral Health

Frequently Asked Questions

Who can prescribe & manage psychiatric medications?
- Psychiatrists. Psychiatrists are medical doctors who specialize in the assessment and treatment of mental health disorders.
- Nurse-Practitioners. Nurse practitioners are registered nurses with advanced training in the assessment and treatment of medical and/or mental health disorders.
- General Practitioners. General practitioners (e.g., primary care providers) are medically trained professionals who are able to prescribe any form of medication (including psychiatric medication) but do not specialize in mental health treatment.

(NAMI San Mateo County recommends initial diagnosis and prescriptions from a psychiatrist.)

Where can I find reliable information about specific psychiatric medications?
- Food & Drug Administration
- National Institute of Mental Health
- National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI)

Are there treatments available for mental health disorders that do not involve medication?
- Psychotherapy is used successfully to treat many mental health conditions. Depending upon the specific mental health disorder and the individual, psychotherapy can be just as effective as medications, and in some cases, more effective.
- Often, however, the most effective approach is to use a combination of psychotherapy and medication. For some mental health disorders such as schizophrenia and bipolar disorder, medication is almost always a necessary part of the treatment.
- We recommend seeing a mental health professional to help you determine which treatment is most appropriate for you.

Getting Reasonable Accommodations at Work Before Stage 4

At Mental Health America (MHA), we work to make sure people can get help Before Stage 4. When we think of cancer or heart disease, we don’t wait years to treat people. We start before Stage 4—we begin with prevention, identify symptoms, and develop a plan to treat and support the person. We need to do the same with mental health.

When you think of acting Before Stage 4, you might think of going to see a therapist as soon as you notice problems with your mental health. This is an important part of acting Before Stage 4. But acting early to change your day-to-day experiences at work can be another important part. For example, if you are distracted because of anxiety or depression, a quiet workspace might help you be more productive and happy, and ultimately support your recovery. Or, if your therapist only has appointments on weekday mornings, a shift in your schedule might help.

But isn’t it up to your boss whether you have a quiet workspace or a later schedule?

Not always. Sometimes, your employer is legally required to make changes that you need because of a mental health condition. The Americans with Disabilities Act, or ADA, says that many people with common mental health conditions like major depression, PTSD, and OCD have the right to get “reasonable accommodations” at work. A reasonable accommodation can be almost anything – getting detailed

The Governor signed AB 1194 (Eggman), which clarifies that danger in the 5150 statute is not restricted to only imminent danger, and that psychiatric history and the input of families MUST be taken into account. This became law in California on January 1, 2016. AB 1194 really amounts to a change in a few words on paper when all is said and done . . . and yet it’s a small but important step forward. NAMI California supported AB 1194, to provide “that for purposes of determining whether a person, as a result of a mental health disorder, is a danger to others, or to himself or herself, danger constitutes a present risk or harm that requires consideration of the historical course of a person’s mental health disorder and shall not be limited to imminent or immediate risk of harm to others or to himself or herself.” AB 1194 has created an opportunity to refine and clarify more broadly who gets care in an emergency setting. It’s also important to note that it will contribute to earlier interventions, and those earlier interventions can lead to better outcomes. In our efforts to make treatment laws more rational, and consistent across counties, hospitals and law enforcement agencies, we have won a victory. http://leginfo.legislature.ca.gov/faces/billNavClient.xhtml?bill_id=201520160AB1194 instructions on assignments, a white noise machine/headphones, or even permission to work from home in some cases – as long as it doesn’t involve significant difficulty or expense, or paying for work that isn’t done. Not everyone with a mental health condition has the right to get reasonable accommodations, but if the condition is affecting your work, there’s a good chance you qualify.

Too often we think of asking for a reasonable accommodation as a last resort, because it could be risky to tell the boss about a mental health condition. But there is also a risk in not telling, if a reasonable accommodation would help you to avoid mistakes that get you in trouble or even fired. And, in addition to requiring reasonable accommodations, the ADA also makes it illegal to discriminate on the basis of disability.

MHA hopes to bring our Before Stage 4 philosophy to the workplace. For additional resources, visit MHA’s workplace wellness site, use our Work Health Survey, and take our mental health screens. Each is designed to help you think about how you can act Before Stage 4.

For additional information on reasonable accommodations, you can also check out these publications by the Job Accommodation Network. To learn more about the law of reasonable accommodation, and what to do if you think your employer isn’t following the law, you can visit the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (“EEOC”) website. The EEOC also has a Fact Sheet that you can give to your psychologist, psychiatrist, or other mental health provider that explains how they can help you get reasonable accommodations.

Note: This is intended to be an informal discussion, and should not be interpreted as an official position of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

When Change is Hard

Making a change is not easy. In fact, 60% of people who achieve their New Year’s resolutions flop once—or more—before succeeding. But you can pump up your healthy habits. The more you stick with a new behavior, the easier it gets. That’s because repetition actually can build pathways in your brain. If you’re having trouble, consider these tools for sticking with change.

Boost Your Motivation
Everyone has times when their motivation sags. Here are some tips to boost yours:

• Remember your why. What made you try this wellness tool? Was it because you wanted to be more focused at work? Less grumpy to your spouse? Less winded at the gym? Or maybe it was just because you deserve to feel good. Whatever your reasons, keep a list to inspire you.

• Make a change. If you’ve tried your chosen tool for a while and aren’t feeling better, try another. Remember, not all of the 10 Tools are right for everyone. Also consider shifting the way you use a tool to avoid boredom. For example, if you’ve chosen to help others, instead of checking on your neighbor this week, try donating to charity.

• Get support. If appropriate, join a group or work with a friend. You also can ask those around you to support your change. If you’re trying to stay positive, you might ask your kids to tell you something great about their day.

• Congratulate yourself. Success breeds success, so acknowledge yourself for any steps forward. Little rewards sometimes also work well.

Resisting Temptation
At times, you may find yourself on the verge of returning to unhealthy behaviors. Tips for those times include:

• Be prepared. Some temptations can be avoided altogether with a little planning. You can pack healthy snacks to resist junk food. You can record your late-night TV show to avoid losing sleep.

• Wait it out. If you’re feeling an unhealthy urge, remind yourself that it will pass. Most urges fade pretty quickly. If yours is stubborn, try distracting yourself with something fun.

• Ask yourself about yourself. What will make you feel better about yourself later, sticking with your wellness change or dropping it?

Dealing with Setbacks
Failing is not such a big problem. How you deal with failure is often what really matters.

• Don’t give up. When you break your plan, try not to assume all is lost. It would be a shame to give up entirely just because you slipped for a few days—or even a few weeks.

• Don’t overly criticize yourself. Scolding makes you feel bad about yourself, and bad does not promote success. Instead, imagine what you’d say to a friend if she had failed.

• Think about what went wrong. Then start looking for solutions. Were you too tired at the end of the day? Try moving your activity to the morning instead. Did you feel like you didn’t have time? You might switch to one of the wellness tools that take almost no time, like staying positive. Did you put other people’s needs before yours too often? Remember that if you don’t take care of yourself, you may wind up too burnt out to help anyone else.

NAMI Applauds Agreement on the 2016 Budget Bill

NAMI [National] Executive Director Mary Giliberti on January 5 praised the House and Senate for their work in reaching agreement on the federal budget bill for 2016.

“This bill clearly demonstrates recognition by the Committee that wise investments in mental health services and research benefit people with mental illness, families, and the nation as a whole,” Giliberti stated. “We are particularly grateful for the agreement’s increased funding for early intervention in the treatment of psychosis, funding for research at the National Institute for Mental Health, and investments in vital services and supports that can prevent negative consequences such as homelessness and incarceration. NAMI is grateful for the efforts of key bipartisan leaders in Congress in bringing about these important investments including Senators Roy Blunt (R-MO) and Patty Murray (D-WA) and Representatives Tom Cole (R-OK) and Rosa DeLauro (D-CT).”

The budget bill includes a number of important provisions including:

• An increase of $50 million for the State Mental Health Block Grant program administered by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), with 10% of these funds designated as a “set aside” for funding early intervention programs for people with serious mental illness, an increase from the current 5% set-aside. NAMI, in partnership with the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH), held a Congressional briefing in October to focus attention on the promise of First Episode Psychosis (FEP) programs such as those established through the NIMH Recovery After an Initial Schizophrenia Episode (RAISE) initiative and to ask Congress for this increase in funding. These programs in research sites across the country showed positive outcomes in reducing disability and fostering recovery.

• An increase of $85.4 million in funding for biomedical and services research at NIMH. Total funding for NIMH in FY 2016 will be increased to $1,548,390,000, a vital investment in research to advance understanding of the causes of mental illness and to identify new treatments for these conditions.

• An increase of $1.5 million for Criminal Justice/Mental Health Collaboration grants funded through the Mentally Ill Offender Treatment and Crime Reduction Act (MIOTCRA) program administered by the U.S. Department of Justice. This program, whose total funding will be $10 million in fiscal year 2016, provides vital grants to states and communities to support jail diversion, mental health courts, law enforcement training, and community reentry programs for people with mental illness and co-occurring substance use disorders involved with criminal justice systems.

The bill also provides $15 million for a new Assisted Outpatient Treatment (AOT) pilot program through SAMHSA. NAMI will be encouraging SAMHSA to focus on funding projects modeled after San Francisco’s new AOT program that include a significant outreach and engagement component prior to AOT or if an AOT order is necessary, to assist and empower people under AOT orders to realize their personal goals and achieve better outcomes.

In Memoriam: Ted Stanley

The Treatment Advocacy Center marks the passing of Ted Stanley, an unequaled philanthropist, friend and champion for eliminating barriers to the treatment of severe mental illness. Inspired by the triumph of his son, Jonathan Stanley, over severe mental illness, Mr. Stanley for decades committed his considerable vision, energy and wealth to reshaping the landscapes of mental illness research and advocacy in America.

Without the support and vision of Ted Stanley and his late wife, Vada, there would be no Treatment Advocacy Center. Dr. E. Fuller Torrey, founder of the Treatment Advocacy Center, tells the story, “In 1998, Vada called me after reading my book Out of the Shadows and asked, ‘Isn’t there something we can do NOW to help people who need treatment for serious mental illness?’ After discussing the problem at length, we agreed that advocacy to improve access to treatment for individuals with serious mental illness – especially those who were not aware of their illness – had the greatest potential. Vada and Ted then committed funds to get the Treatment Advocacy Center started.”

The generous and unwavering commitment of the Stanley’s made possible the Treatment Advocacy Center’s emergence as a prominent national voice for mental illness policy reform. Since our founding in 1998, more than half the U.S. states have made important changes to their civil commitment standards and treatment laws as a result of this work. In late 2015, President Obama signed a bill into law that, for the first time, provides federal funding for assisted outpatient treatment programs, a signature success that harksens back to Vada’s initial plea for programs to help those who need treatment NOW.

In addition to supporting the Treatment Advocacy Center’s achievements, Mr. Stanley emerged as a philanthropist without rival in the support of mental illness research. Through the Stanley Family Foundation, he donated almost $600 million to the Stanley Medical Research Institute to support groundbreaking research on the causes and treatment of schizophrenia and bipolar disorder. He funded psychiatric research at the Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory in New York and at the Broad Institute in Cambridge, Massachusetts. And, in 2014, he donated $650 million to the Broad Institute to support genomic research of schizophrenia and bipolar disorder, bringing his total donations for mental illness research to more than 1.2 billion dollars.

The Treatment Advocacy Center celebrates the life and generosity of Ted Stanley. No one has done as much to advance the cause of mental illness treatment. We all stand in awe of his contributions that promise to benefit humanity for generations.

Congressional Agenda

Laying out his agenda for Congress this election year, Speaker Paul Ryan highlighted both mental health and criminal justice reform as areas where he expected to see legislation passed.

Reforms currently being discussed in both areas would have a profound impact on the way the country treats people with severe mental illness.

Ryan highlighted two bills that focus on reforming our broken system to better serve people with severe mental illness, noting that both already enjoy strong bipartisan agreement:

• The Helping Families in Mental Health Crisis Act, introduced by Representatives Tim Murphy (R-PA) and Eddie Bernice Johnson (D-TX), focuses on mental health reform for those with severe mental illness and their families who are struggling to get necessary care for their loved ones. The legislation advanced out of the House Energy and Commerce health subcommittee markup in November with all provisions intact to help people with severe psychiatric illnesses.

• The Comprehensive Justice and Mental Health Act of 2015, introduced by Representatives Doug Collins (R-GA) and Bobby Scott (D-VA) would increase CIT and other training for law enforcement on how to appropriately respond to incidents involving people with mental illness, provide support for mental health courts and expand data collection on the criminalization of mental illness. The legislation passed this week out of the House Judiciary Committee. The Senate companion bill of the same name passed out of the Senate by voice vote in December.

The combination of effective mental health and criminal justice reform holds the potential of finally addressing our nation’s longstanding mental health failures. For too long, our nation’s mental health system has failed those in need, leaving law enforcement to pick up the pieces. As a consequence, our jails have become de facto psychiatric facilities. It is inhumane, ineffective and too often ends in tragedy.

CONTACT YOUR LEGISLATORS. Tell them that you support comprehensive mental health reform and urge them to support the Helping Families in Mental Health Crisis Act (HR 2646) and the Comprehensive Justice and Mental Health Act of 2015 (HR 1854).
