Creativity in Mood Disorders: A Look at the Research

Sheri Johnson, Ph.D.,
Professor of Psychology, Director of the Cal Mania (CALM) Program, University of California, Berkeley

Clinical psychologist Kay Jamison drew on biographies and autobiographies to identify an array of musicians, artists and authors with experiences of mania. Professor Sheri Johnson will review the science on whether creativity levels are higher among people with a history of mania and their family members, and those with depression, and will discuss mechanisms that might help explain the links observed.

NAMI San Mateo County General Meetings are free and open to the public. We welcome all who support our mission to improve the quality of life for people with mental illnesses and their families.

Study for Bipolar Youth

The Department of Psychiatry at Stanford University is recruiting 14-21 year old youth who have bipolar disorder to participate in a PAID research study on sleep and mood patterns.

Sleep is commonly disrupted in adults who are diagnosed with bipolar disorder. However, there has been limited investigation of sleep in youth bipolar disorder. Our aim is to better understand sleep in youth diagnosed with bipolar disorder, and to explore the relation of sleep to mood in this population. The goal of this work is to help advance new treatments for youth affected with bipolar disorder.

The study has 3 parts:
• One visit by parent and youth to our lab for interviews and questionnaires.
• Two nights of sleep assessment in your home. Trained members of our team will set up a device that measures sleep in your home, then leave. We pick up the device the following morning.
• Three weeks in which we ask the youth to complete a brief daily diary using his/her cell phone and to wear a special wristwatch.

You will receive up to $215 for completing the study. If you would like to receive more information, please contact us at (650) 736-2689 or dailyrest@stanford.edu.

#aBedInstead

It’s getting harder and harder to find a psychiatric hospital bed for people in a crisis – our nation’s psychiatric bed shortage has left the most severely ill with nowhere to go.

What does that mean for someone who needs care? Our failed mental health treatment system now substitutes appropriate inpatient psychiatric care with a revolving door jails, prisons, emergency rooms, homeless shelters and a long list of other consequences.

People with severe mental illness and their families deserve better than this; they need #aBedInstead.

A BED INSTEAD OF JAIL. There are now 10x more people with severe mental illness behind bars than receiving treatment in a hospital.

A BED INSTEAD OF BEING HOMELESS. People with untreated psychiatric illnesses comprise at least one-third, of the estimated 600,000 homeless population.

A BED INSTEAD OF DYING BY SUICIDE. Suicide is the number one cause of premature death among people with schizophrenia, with an estimated 5 percent ending their own lives. Similarly, women with bipolar disorder are 10 times more likely to die by suicide than the general population and men were 9 times more likely.

A BED INSTEAD OF BEING VICTIMIZED. People with untreated severe mental illness are especially vulnerable. They are at increased risk of being assaulted, raped or even victims of homicide.

A BED INSTEAD OF BEING KILLED BY LAW ENFORCEMENT. People with severe mental illness are 16 times more likely to be killed during a police encounter than other civilians approached or stopped by law enforcement.

The Treatment Advocacy Center is campaigning to end this injustice.

TOGETHER, WE WILL:

BRING ATTENTION to the causes and devastating consequences of our national psychiatric bed shortage;

REFORM POLICIES at the state and federal levels that created and perpetuate this crisis;

INCREASE THE AVAILABLE NUMBER of psychiatric beds for people with severe mental illness; and ENSURE ACCESS for people to have #aBedInstead.

WHAT YOU CAN DO:

LEARN about the psychiatric bed crisis and what policy changes can be made to help.

EDUCATE your policymakers on the issue, and tell them we need to increase access to inpatient psychiatric care.

VOICE the need for more beds with your followers and federal, state and local policymakers on social media. Use the hashtag #aBedInstead.

Handling Anosognosia – Neurological Inability to Recognize Your Mental Illness
By Natasha Tracy
http://www.healthyplace.com/blogs/breakingbipolar/2012/10/handling-anosognosia-neurological-inability-recognize-mental-illness/

I’ve written before about denying you have bipolar disorder and about how others also tend to deny that a person has a mental illness. These positions are understandable as no one wants to admit to having an illness let alone a mental illness. But there is a type of denial of mental illness that goes beyond mere psychological denial – this is called anosognosia and it is the clinical term for the lack of insight required to understand you have a mental illness. Anosognosia is a neurological disorder thought to be caused by abnormalities in the frontal lobes.

Anosognosia – What, Who and Why

Put another way, anosognosia is the lack of awareness of the deficits, signs and symptoms of an illness. It is not merely a denial; it is an actual neurological deficit. Anosognosia is seen commonly in psychotic disorders like schizophrenia but it’s also seen in those who have right brain hemisphere lesions due to stroke, dementia and traumatic brain injury. Some studies show that people with schizophrenia also have brain hemispheric asynchrony in the anteroinferior temporal lobe and this asymmetry correlates to a lack of illness awareness.

Is it Denial or Anosognosia?

The important thing to remember is the anosognosia is neurological and beyond a patient’s control. According Puihan Chao, MA and Michelle Kawasaki, MA of the Adult Mental Health Division at the Department of Health in the State of Hawaii, anosognosia is characterised by:

- A severe and persistent lack of insight
- The erroneous beliefs (such as “I am not sick”) are fixed and do not change even after the person is confronted with overwhelming contrary evidence
- Ilogical explanations and confabulations that attempt to explain away the evidence

What to Do about Anosognosia

Understandably, anosognosia is one of the more troubling symptoms of severe mental illness as it prevents a person from getting the help they need. The “easy” way to handle this is to rely on a “doctor knows best” approach and simply medicate without consent. And, indeed, sometimes that is the only approach that works and is the most appropriate.

Chao and Kawasaki though, recommend another approach that relies on:

- Listening to the patient
- Empathizing with the patient
- Agreeing with the patient
- Partnering with the patient

This approach, signified as LEAP, is laid out nicely in their PowerPoint presentation.

You Can’t Talk Someone Out of a Delusion

I think the critical thing they stress though, is that you can’t talk someone out of a delusion. That’s the definition of delusion. It is a belief in the face of contrary evidence. And anosognosia is a delusion. If you believe that your cat is sending you signals from god, I will not simply talk you out of that belief because the belief isn’t rational in the first place. If rationale were all it took, then no one would ever be delusional.

And the other thing they seem to stress is listening to the person with anosognosia. Use the patient’s own framework to reach them. If the person doesn’t feel that they are sick, find out what problems they do believe they have and address those. For example, if a person feels their problem is that they are too paranoid to sleep, focus on addressing that issue with treatment rather than trying to convince them of an illness.

The crux of this treatment then, is to get the person to see the need for treatment in their own way rather than forcing medication on them. This is a type of Motivational Enhancement Therapy (common in addition therapy) and motivational interventions were found to be more useful than simple psychoeducation approaches by Zygmont et al in 2002 in terms of medication adherence in schizophrenia.

Long story short, this might be the more humane way of approaching those with anosognosia for doctors and those around the person with the mental illness.

Coming Out Proud to Erase the Stigma of Mental Illness:
Stories and Essays of Solidarity by Patrick W. Corrigan

One of the most effective ways to erase stigma is by people with lived experience telling their stories of recovery. Being in the closet with mental health experiences often leads to shame. COMING OUT replaces shame with a sense of authority and empowerment and promotes the fact that people with even the most serious of mental illnesses recover and do so by actively choosing their goals. This is a book about people COMING OUT, standing up and proudly hailing their life journey.

Out Came the Sun: Overcoming the Legacy of Mental Illness, Addiction, and Suicide in My Family by Mariel Hemingway and Ben Greenman

She opens her eyes. The room is dark. She hears yelling, smashed plates, and wishes it was all a terrible dream. But it isn’t. This is what it was like growing up as a Hemingway. In this deeply moving, searingly honest memoir, actress and mental health icon Mariel Hemingway shares in candid detail the story of her troubled childhood in a famous family haunted by depression, alcoholism, illness, and suicide.

NAMI National Convention 2016

July 6 - 9
Denver, Colorado
www.nami.org/convention

The NAMI National Convention will gather nearly 2,000 mental health activists and advocates from across the United States and other countries. The convention educates, encourages and empowers a diverse community that is passionate about building better lives for people affected by mental illness. This year’s theme is “Act. Advocate. Achieve.”

Call for Participants - GRAVELY DISABLED

The feature documentary GRAVELY DISABLED takes an in-depth look at two families and their loved ones living with mental health disorders. One is the story of Teresa Sheehan, who was shot seven times by police and lived. The participants’ deeply personal stories will shed light on the uncertainty and anguish associated with severe mental illness and the daunting efforts by families to seek assistance in a broken public health system.

The stories of family members and loved ones with severe mental illness will illuminate the need for significant changes, shatter myths and assert dignity for all.

I am seeking family members of individuals with serious mental illness to tell your story as you struggle to meet challenges in your daily life for use in the documentary. It would also be good if your loved one could appear in the film.

I will not ask you to say or do anything you don’t feel comfortable with. To protect your identity, I will not use last names. Sharing your story will illustrate how the lack of resources adds to the crisis and that significant changes need to be made, both in California and nationwide. Tragedies can and do happen for the want of a hospital psychiatric bed. Film is a powerful way to make a difference and that is my goal.

About the filmmaker:

My younger sister has schizophrenia, which is what brings me to make the film. My sister’s situation and the impact it has had on my family makes me very sensitive to the issues, and determined to show the depth of the impact on families and their on-going struggle to help their loved one with SMI.

I am a member of NAMI and took the Family 2 Family class. It was great. My experience in support groups makes me very aware of how having a loved one with mental illness impacts the whole family. I also understand that it takes courage to go public with your story.

You can watch the 5-minute trailer and get more info at: http://www.gravelydisabled.com. Please contact sheila.ganz@gmail.com if you would like to discuss this further.

—Thank you, Sheila Ganz
