Cordilleras Campus
Redesign Project
and Laura’s Law

Terry Wilcox-Rittgers, M.S., M.F.T.
BHRS Clinical Services Manager II

Learn more about the Cordilleras Campus Redesign Project and the implementation of Laura’s Law Services in our county, including details about the referral process to Laura’s Law Services. The Cordilleras Project will result in a state-of-the-art campus, replacing the former 1950’s three-story building with five therapeutic home-like sixteen-bed mental health rehabilitation facilities, residential housing and a campus center. Laura’s Law Services (Assisted Outpatient Treatment) will help fill a gap in the spectrum of services currently in San Mateo County.

NAMI San Mateo County General Meetings are free and open to the public.

Silicon Valley Gives!

On Tuesday, May 3, 2016, Silicon Valley Gives will raise money for local nonprofits through a single online donation platform.

Chances are good that if you live in the Bay Area, you have seen #SVGives2016 trending on-line. The goal of SVGives is to inspire philanthropy, at any level, and create a community of giving for Bay Area causes such as ours.

Matching Gift Opportunity! An anonymous generous donor has offered us a $10,000.00 matching gift if we raise $10,000.00 through contributions from our members and friends. Help us help you and the wider community! Thank you!

Please visit our NAMI SMC/Siliconvalleygives home page: https://svgives.ra-zoo.com/us/story/Nami-San-Mateo-County. Make a donation today and share your donation through Facebook, Twitter, email and enlighten your friends, colleagues and family about NAMI SMC; #iamstigmafree!

How to Help a Friend With a Mental Illness

By Katie Medlock, 3/18/16

Whether you know it or not, there are people in your life who are struggling with (or have struggled with) mental illness. According to the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI), one in four adults experience it within a given year. The term itself is so often associated with startling imagery and uninformed stereotypes that many of us do not have an accurate understanding of what people actually go through, let alone how to help.

Being able to be a supportive presence in the life of someone dealing with their illness does not require any special skills, but rather tapping into some of the fundamental abilities we all have, but just may not use very well or often. Here is a good start to helping a friend with mental illness.

1. Listen to what they are saying—Seems basic, right? Listening skills are some of our best tools in creating strong and healthy relationships with all of the people in our (Continued on page 4)
Be The One - Stand Up For Mental Health this May

One in four people have a mental illness yet less than half are getting the help they need—many because they are afraid others will judge them.

You can be the one to help change that.

May is Mental Health Month. San Mateo County Behavioral Health and Recovery Services is raising awareness about the important role mental health plays in our lives and encouraging members of the community to learn more about their own mental health and to take action if they are experiencing symptoms of a mental illness.

Join us at one of the many events hosted throughout San Mateo County as we stand up and work together to help everyone live a long and healthy life.

There are too many programs to list here - plan to attend some events! See the list of events and learn how to make a difference, access: http://www.smchealth.org/bhrs/mental-healthmonth

In Our Own Voice Comes to the SMMC

Starting Monday, May 2, NAMI SMC will be offering In Our Own Voice presentations twice a month on the psychiatric inpatient unit at the San Mateo Medical Center. This is a first for our affiliate and a substantial increase in our offerings to the community.

Presenters are individuals with lived experience who will share their compelling and personal testimonies of living with and overcoming the challenges posed by mental illness. Presenters take a 16-hour training course and participate in a review presentation before the affiliate accepts presentation opportunities in the community.

Congratulations to our presenters, you are great ambassadors for NAMI SMC!

To schedule a presentation and/or if you would like to take part in the next In Our Own Voice training class, contact nami@namisanmateo.org or call 650-638-0800.

Supporting Your Mentally Ill Sibling

By Kim Nobles

Yes, I know. You don’t want to support that difficult brother or sister, you just want them to change their behavior. They disrupt family life, and it seems they get an inordinate amount of attention. Reality is that you must also do some changing – it may take years for your sibling to progress to a point when ‘normal’ social interaction is possible, but if you’re willing, you can play a role in making that happen.

When illness is new and severe, you both need support! You need to learn all you can about the illness. You need to talk with others facing the same challenge. Therapy can be a big help if it is affordable. NAMI San Mateo County (NAMISMC) Family-to-Family classes are free and offer education and support. NAMISMC also offers support groups, listed on page five of this newsletter. I went to the NAMISMC office to pick up some material, and quickly discovered that by volunteering there, I could learn, share and lend a compassionate ear to callers. All of the above have served me and my mentally ill brother well.

I encourage you to take advantage of the resources available to you. Eventually, resentment and anger are harmful. They’re best used as catalysts, as energy moving you to action and understanding and healing.

AKA and NAMI SMC Team Up!

In 2015, Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc. (AKA) and NAMI, began working together to increase mental health awareness in the African American community. Visit the website: http://www.nami.org/About-NAMI/Partners/AKA-and-NAMI.

Thank you Rho Delta Omega Chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc., Palo Alto for coming to the NAMI SMC office and sharing your goals with us; and thank you for purchasing some of our lovely NAMI Jewelry. Stay tuned! lives. We all have a need to be heard, yet sometimes it can be difficult to offer this opportunity for others. If a friend comes to you to talk about what they are going through, make sure you eliminate all distractions and really try to focus on understanding what they are expressing. Forget about planning what to say next and ignore the fear of saying something “wrong”—these all get in the way of truly hearing what is being said to us.

2. Validate what they are feeling—So, how do you respond when someone is sharing their difficult experiences? It is likely that what they are sharing with you is difficult because society has stigmatized their experiences as bizarre or even not real. If a friend tells you they have been isolating themselves, they find it hard to leave their home or they have suspicions about people that sound odd—search for the emotion they are describing and validate it. They might be feeling sad, frightened, confused, worried or even numb. The fact that someone can understand what we are feeling and tell us “it’s okay” can do more than one might think.

3. Ask what they need—Many people living with mental illness have had their experiences minimized or ignored. More still have had others tell them what needs to be done to “get better”—everything from family suggestions to involuntary hospitalization can feel like the person’s ability to identify what they need is being taken away. Even if your friend says they do not know what they need, the question still must be asked so they are very much a part of their recovery.

4. Educate yourself about their experiences—The most important way to do this is to interact directly with your friend (see step number one!) to understand their individual experiences. Yet, if someone is struggling with depression, for example, gather more information about the diagnosis itself to get a grasp on the facts and to challenge any lingering misinformation or stereotypes picked up from others. NAMI, the National Institute of Mental Health and the American Psychiatric Association offer a database of information about various disorders and how friends and family can help. Choices in Recovery and Mental Health Channel offer additional resources, newsletters, fact sheets and even video series highlighting people living with mental illness.

5. Keep being a friend—Something important to remember is that your friend is still the same person you know and love, even if you learn they are struggling with an illness. Many people find themselves worried about how to act or what to do differently, yet this hyper-awareness can sometimes be detrimental to the core of your connection with the person. Just as if you were to learn a friend is dealing with a physical illness, the kind of friend you are does not change. Follow-up with your friend. Respect their space if they need it. Spend more time together if that is what they prefer. Keep doing the things that keep your friendship strong.

With anyone in recovery for mental illness, some risks face them which may not face others. If you suspect your friend is feeling suicidal or is having difficulty caring for themselves due to their symptoms, seek guidance from trusted professionals. Calling the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline is one way to connect with professionals who can assist you in figuring out what steps to take next to keep your friend safe.

New Additions to the Library

Please visit the library at the NAMI San Mateo County office - we have books and videos available to check out! We’re buying two new books a month, and wish to promote them to those interested. If you have read a book related to Mental Health issues that you believe would benefit others, please email the office with the title and author.

Healing Feelings by Leslie Baker M.A., M.F.T.

Healing Feelings is a warm, rhythmic story that brings hope for healing to children living with a grownup who is dealing with a mental illness. The story explores the process of healing feelings and opens up the opportunity to dialog with children about this challenging topic.

Can I Catch It Like A Cold? presented by the Center for Addiction and Mental Health

Why is my parent acting this Way? Will my parent get better? Is it my fault? Can I catch depression like a cold?

These are among the many questions asked by children when a parent has depression. Can I Catch It Like A Cold? spurs dialogue, offers reassurance, and allays fears for those who cope with this adult-sized problem.

Edward Hoffman
September 24, 1953 – April 18, 2016
“He Inspired a Movement”

Edward Hoffman passed away peacefully on April 18, 2016 in the family home in San Mateo. His passing was due to lung failure – he enjoyed smoking and managed to do so until the end. He is preceded in death by his parents, Tony Hoffman, a machinist and union activist, and Frances Hoffman, formerly a professional executive assistant.

Born on September 24, 1953 in San Francisco, Edward was an exceptionally bright child. At age 15, he was diagnosed with chronic schizophrenia, left school and was institutionalized for much of his adult life. He was fortunate to have been schooled at Napa State Hospital, allowing him to achieve a high school diploma then attend classes at Napa Community College. He was employed in vocational rehabilitation programs at Napa State Hospital and, later, at San Mateo County’s Workcenter.

Edward’s struggle with chronic mental illness inspired his parents to join a small group of parents in San Mateo County who mobilized other parents to advocate for the chronic and seriously mentally ill. The parents’ efforts led to a nationwide grassroots movement. The family’s story was featured in a 2009 documentary, entitled When Medicine Got it Wrong, that showed how the nationwide grassroots advocacy movement challenged psychiatry’s view of serious mental illness and overturned assumptions about brain disorders.

Despite his difficult and tumultuous life, Edward maintained a dry wit and unique sense of humor that many found engaging. He would often announce the “Word of the Day” to whoever was in the room. Some of his favorite “Words of the Day” were, “Jimmy Page,” “The Who and the Yea” and “Hit Hard Disease,” all of which had some meaning to him, yet left others to wonder.

Edward was always ready to go somewhere, anywhere. Some of his favorites activities were going to restaurants, watching old western television shows, listening to 60s rock music, fishing at the trout farm, soaking in waves at the beach, watching comic book superhero movies, shaking hands and fist bumps and, most of all, any outing with his father. “It takes a village…,” and Edward was very fortunate to have outstanding individuals in his village. Special gratitude goes to Dr. Werner Ju, Dr. Gordon Mak, Dr. John Herbert, the Green Team, Ian Adamson, the Mateo Lodge team, Mission Hospice and our angel, Raquel Lang. They all contributed toward improving Ed’s health and quality of life.

Edward is survived by his sister, Julie Hoffman, and niece, Anna Fessler-Hoffman. In his own way, Edward enriched the lives of those around him. For better or worse, his journey is now over.

Donations may be made in his memory to: Mateo Lodge, 420 Cassia Street, Redwood City, CA 94063 and Mission Hospice, 1670 S. Amphlett Blvd., Suite 300, San Mateo, CA 94402.

Call for Participants - GRAVELY DISABLED

The feature documentary GRAVELY DISABLED takes an in-depth look at two families and their loved ones living with mental health disorders. One is the story of Teresa Sheehan, who was shot seven times by police and lived. The participants’ deeply personal stories will shed light on the uncertainty and anguish associated with severe mental illness and the daunting efforts by families to seek assistance in a broken public health system.

The stories of family members and loved ones with severe mental illness will illuminate the need for significant changes, shatter myths and assert dignity for all.

I am seeking family members of individuals with serious mental illness to tell your story as you struggle to meet challenges in your daily life for use in the documentary. It would also be good if your loved one could appear in the film.

I will not ask you to say or do anything you don’t feel comfortable with. To protect your identity, I will not use last names. Sharing your story will illustrate how the lack of resources adds to the crisis and that significant changes need to be made, both in California and nationwide. Tragedies can and do happen for the want of a hospital psychiatric bed. Film is a powerful way to make a difference and that is my goal.

About the filmmaker:

My younger sister has schizophrenia, which is what brings me to make the film. My sister’s situation and the impact it has had on my family makes me very sensitive to the issues, and determined to show the depth of the impact on families and their on-going struggle to help their loved one with SMI.

I am a member of NAMI and took the Family 2 Family class. It was great. My experience in support groups makes me very aware of how having a loved one with mental illness impacts the whole family. I also understand that it takes courage to go public with your story.

You can watch the 5-minute trailer and get more info at: http://www.gravelydisabled.com. Please contact sheila.ganz@gmail.com if you would like to discuss this further.

—Thank you, Sheila Ganz

The Role of Asylum in Treatment

What does "asylum" mean in the context of mental illness treatment?
In popular usage, "asylum" has long been linked to state psychiatric hospitals, once known as "insane asylums." What asylum should mean, two authors maintain in a recent publication, is "sanctuary" - a place that provides "protection, safety, security and social support."

In "Rediscovering the concept of asylum for persons with serious mental illness," H. Richard Lamb, MD,* and Linda E. Weinberger, PhD, call for a recognition that many individuals with severe mental illness still need the functions state hospitals once performed in order to live optimally.

The Functions of Asylum
They identify five such functions:
• Lowering stress
• Providing protection and social support
• Matching demands for performance to capabilities
• Providing adequate treatment services
• Supplying structure

"Asylum can be provided in the home by the patient's family or in a community facility, such as a board-and-care home," the authors write in the Journal of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law. "In many cases, the structure of a psychiatric hospital is needed. Serious problems will most likely arise whenever a community lacks adequate equivalents for the full range of functions traditionally served by state mental hospitals. This includes the provision of asylum to those patients who need it. Indeed, it is apparent that many of the problems plaguing deinstitutionalization today derive, first, from our failure to recognize that some psychiatric patients with serious mental illness still have a need for asylum and, second, from our failure to offer that asylum even when we recognize the necessity."

Practical Realities
The authors describe four situations in which the concept of asylum has practical impacts:
• Rehabilitation. Effective rehabilitation can reduce the need for asylum but, for individuals in need of shelter or structure, "the elements of asylum often need to be supplied concurrently if rehabilitation programs are to achieve maximum results."
• Expectations. There is "a narrow line" between two dangers in treatment - too much and too little stimulation - and it needs to be walked with a recognition that "fruitless efforts to push people to adjust to a lifestyle beyond their capabilities" causes the patients anguish and runs the risk of contributing to their relapse.
• Institutionalism. This syndrome of withdrawal, disinterest and excessive reliance on other institutions was once thought to be entirely the result of living in institutions providing asylum. Increasingly, institutionalism is viewed at least in part as a reflection of the schizophrenic disease process. "A place of asylum should include treatment interventions that increase the individual's ability to tolerate stress. Testing these interventions in a safe and supportive environment can assist in assuring successful transition to less structured settings in the community."
• Incarceration. Mentally ill offenders have additional needs for the functions of asylum when they are released from jails and prisons. Offenders without access to such functions are at higher risk for reoffending and relapse.

"Treating persons with serious mental illness requires more than just making the correct diagnosis, prescribing the right medications and providing the appropriate psychotherapeutic approach," Lamb and Weinberger conclude. "There should be an in-depth understanding of patients' needs for structure and their ability to cope with stress, as well as an assurance that they are in suitable living situations. Above all, the importance of asylum and sanctuary cannot be underestimated."

Treat Mentally Ill Offenders, Don’t Just Jail Them
By Darrell Steinberg, 4/17/2016

A failure to treat severe mental illness is not just a mark against our state's humanity; it is an issue of pressing importance to the very functionality of our criminal justice system.

In the past year alone, 45 percent of California’s state prison inmates have been treated for severe mental illness. That’s right: Nearly half of all inmates suffer from mental health trauma.

That’s why a bipartisan group of criminal justice leaders has joined with Assemblymen Marc Levine of San Rafael, Tony Thurmond of Richmond and Evan Low of San Jose, all Democrats, to propose legislation that will tackle the crisis head-on. This legislation — the Mental Health Justice Act (AB2262) — will enable our judiciary to assign nonviolent mentally ill offenders to desperately needed treatment while allowing our prison and jail personnel to focus on serious, violent criminals.

The Mental Health Justice Act works by allowing an individual with a previously diagnosed mental illness to petition the court to require mental health treatment as part of his or her sentence.

It’s common-sense humanity: Treatment of an illness should be a basic necessity for anyone who passes through the criminal justice system.

For defendants convicted of a nonserious, nonviolent crime, a judge would have the ability to sentence the defendant to a residential mental health treatment facility instead of a traditional jail or prison where they would face significant risk of further deterioration. (Of course, this would not be an option if the defendant could pose a risk of danger to public safety.)

If a defendant is convicted of a more serious crime, the sentencing judge would instead be empowered to require the defendant to be placed in a prison or jail mental health program and require that the prison or jail prepare a post-release mental health treatment plan before that individual is released.

During the past 15 years, the number of people requiring mental health treatment in prison has almost doubled, so that our jails and prisons have become California’s de facto mental hospitals.

The discretion granted to judges by the Mental Health Justice Act is a practical approach that will help ensure individuals who live with a mental illness receive the treatment they need, rather than simply being warehoused in a way that exacerbates their mental illness.

It’s more effective not only to those suffering; it’s more effective at deterring crime as well: Studies have found that individuals who participate in mental health courts and receive the treatment they need reoffend at one-third of the rate of those who do not.

From a budget perspective, mental health courts in other states have been demonstrated to save as much as $7 in costs for every $1 spent. That means more resources to focus on serious, violent criminals.

Although there are certainly not enough community-based mental health treatment services in California, and I hope this legislation helps draw additional attention and resources to the shortfall, some programs do exist and can be enlisted to help solve this problem.

The status quo is a disgrace — one that is unjust to the millions of individuals and family members who are suffering, as well as to the correctional officers who are forced to manage a crisis diverting resources away from serious criminals.

A failure to treat severe mental illness is not just a mark against our state’s humanity; it is an issue of pressing importance to the very functionality of our criminal justice system.

By passing the Mental Health Justice Act, we can begin setting a new course — one that takes a more just, more effective approach to the intersection between mental illness and criminal justice.
