General Meeting Review – Thanksgiving!

On Wednesday, November 18th, we celebrated Thanksgiving with our traditional Pie General Meeting! It was a fun time for all – connecting with old friends, and meeting new ones – over plentiful helpings of pie and whipped cream!!

Attendees were encouraged to participate in the Be the One Campaign to help fight stigma surrounding mental illness (http://smcbhrsblog.org/betheonesmc/); James Hsiao was given an appreciation award for 25 years of offering his home, Perpetual Hope House, as a home to individuals with mental illness; Terry Walker was recognized for her contributions to NAMI SMC and was presented with a photo from her 90th birthday celebration; Diane Warner recognized for her birthday; and friends and family members who are no longer with us were remembered by name, and by a recitation of a special poem, “We Remember Them.”

This year’s live music was delightful and most impressive. The Friction Quartet (www.friction-quartet.com), under the auspices of the St. Lawrence String Quartet, played selections from Haydn, Benjamin Brittan and others, including an encore of Michael Jackson’s Thriller!

Following the music, the evening continued with the main theme of Thanksgiving, Thankfulness and Gratitude. Participants reflected on the many things they were grateful for, in spite of the difficulties in their lives. Amongst the many statements made were: how grateful people were to have found NAMI; how supportive the staff were when they needed help; they were grateful to have been educated and for the friends they have made, and how each new day is a new opportunity.

To everyone who made this event possible – from volunteers to pie makers and everyone in-between – a big thank you! It was a fun, relaxing, and rewarding evening. Hope to see you next year!

CIT and PERT

Jason Albertson,
LCSW  San Mateo County BHRS
and
Jim Coffman,
Detective, San Mateo County Sheriff

The Psychiatric Emergency Response Team is an innovative, cooperative approach to provide followup and a linkage to care for people who come to attention of law enforcement in unincorporated San Mateo County and areas that contract with the Sheriff for police services. One of the first cop/clinician teams in Northern California, PERT goals include attempting to reduce risk in order to prevent tragic outcomes. Jason and Jim will detail their program and explain how CIT in San Mateo County evolved into PERT.

Holiday Blues

The Holiday Blues refer to feelings of anxiety or depression during the period between Thanksgiving and New Year’s. They may be associated with extra stress, unrealistic expectations or even sentimental memories that accompany the season. They may include: Loneliness and isolation • Fatigue • Sadness • Tension • A sense of loss • Frustration.

The difference between the holiday blues and clinical anxiety or depression is that the feelings are temporary. They may come and go around specific holiday activities. However, if they are present for more than two weeks, especially every day, the mental health problem may be more serious.

It’s also important to understand that people already diagnosed with a mental illness can feel the holiday blues—and need to take extra care of themselves.

What Causes the Holiday Blues?

Many factors can someone’s mood over the holidays, including:
• Less sunlight (October –March).
• Changes in diet or routines.
• Alcohol is a depressant. Too much alcohol can create or intensify depressive moods, and the holiday season is filled with parties.

The Silicon Valley Suicides

Why are so many kids with bright prospects killing themselves in Palo Alto?

A few students had gotten in early to take some photos dressed as Scooby-Doo characters, part of an annual volleyball-team tradition. Now one of them, Alyssa See-Tho, was waiting outside the choir room for first period to start.

Slowly, classmates began to join her. Through the windows, they could spy the teachers packed in there. In the other classrooms of Henry M. Gunn High School, about 1,900 kids waited. After a few minutes the teachers filed out, each holding a sheet of paper, none talking. Alyssa took her seat inside.

It was November 4, 2014, a few days after homecoming and maybe a month before college applications would start making everyone crazy. The teacher read a statement containing the words took his own life last night, and then a name, Cameron Lee. Alyssa’s first thought: Is there another Cameron Lee at our school? because the one she knew was popular and athletic and seemingly unbothered by schoolwork, an avid practitioner of the annoying prank of turning people’s backpacks inside out.

Alex Gil got to school a little late that day and saw people crying in the hallways. The principal, Denise Herrmann, stopped him and told him, because she knew he was one of Cameron’s best friends, and he fell to his knees. He thought about a text Cameron had sent him the day before. Cameron had gone to tryouts for varsity basketball but hadn’t yet gotten his required physical, so he had asked whether Alex thought he could get in to see the doctor the next day. He must have sent the text only a few hours before he died. ...
Stanford Creates Center For Youth Well-being

Stanford Medicine’s Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences has consolidated all of its existing youth mental health efforts – as well as some new ones – under one roof and a new name: the Stanford Center for Youth mental health and Well-being.

Welcome to Research Weekly, a new educational service of the Treatment Advocacy Center. Beginning December 1 and publishing most Tuesdays, Research Weekly will provide regular, reader-friendly reports on scientific or scholarly studies of brain, behavior and public policy involving severe mental illness.

Subjects will be varied but always relevant: brain research into the causes of severe mental illnesses, studies of treatment modalities and their effectiveness, findings about individual and social outcomes when individuals with psychiatric disease are untreated and evidence-based results from public policies among them.

"Much of the research that would help individuals, families and professionals be better informed about the psychiatric diseases they live or work with is hard to locate or inaccessible," said Doris A. Fuller, chief of Research & Public Affairs and editor of the new publication. "Research Weekly will digest and report in everyday language on the most relevant and useful of these studies."

If you already receive the Treatment Advocacy Center’s News Roundup, you will automatically receive Research Weekly beginning December 1. Please visit the Office of Research & Public Affairs for more information: orpa@treatmentadvocacycenter.org.

Membership Time!

Please renew your membership with NAMI San Mateo County - we value your support! If you haven’t yet joined the 2016 membership, please use the request for membership renewal you receive in the mail, or there’s a form on the back page of this newsletter. Or check our website! www.namisanmateo.org.

By joining at this local affiliate level (preferred) you will receive the local San Mateo County monthly newsletter promptly, which highlights local news and general information, advocacy activities, and support meetings. You will also receive the NAMI California web newsletter, and the NAMI National full-color magazine, each offering their respective level of coverage and commentary. Thank you for continuing to support NAMI-SMC!

Our Condolences

It is with deep sorrow that we share the news that NAMI SMC member and long time consumer advocate George Culores has passed away on November 6. George shared many insightful opinions at the NAMI SMC General Meetings. He was an extremely nice and thoughtful person and will be missed.

Our sincere condolences to the Culores Family.

George was an active member on the Heart and Soul Board of Directors. I first met George in a peer counseling class at College of San Mateo. He helped me to discover my love of public speaking. He volunteered me to do a role play one day. It was the first time I ever stood up in front of a group and spoke.

—Christopher Jump, NAMI SMC board member

- Extra stress comes from holiday preparations or family demands. Buying presents, hosting events, preparing meals and even the pressure of getting holiday cards in the mail on time can wear a person down.
- Unrealistic expectations, such as wanting to attend every gathering you’re invited to or wanting to spend more than your budget allows on gifts.
- Over-commercialization of the season through advertising and store sales.
- Inability to travel or attend family gatherings.
- Feeling a difference between past holidays and the present one—sometimes because of the loss of a loved one or change in your living or work situation.

Children and the Blues

Child and adolescent psychiatric hospitalizations peak during winter months, including the holiday season.

Children are perceptive. They pick up on the mood of parents and other family members. They also feel the loss of close family members who may have died with whom they have celebrated in the past, such as grandparents. They can feel loss from other changes, such as a deployed parent or family upheavals such as moving, divorce, etc.

It’s important to keep in mind that children and teenagers also aren’t limited to simply feeling “blue:” 50% of lifetime cases of mental illness appear by age 14 and 75% by age 24.

Does the Suicide Rate Rise During the Holidays?

It’s a myth. In fact, the suicide rate tends to be lowest in winter. Suicides increase in the spring. But symptoms of depression and thoughts of suicide must be taken seriously any time of the year, including the holidays.

Avoiding the Holiday Blues

- Stick to normal routines as much as possible.
- Get enough sleep or rest.
- Take time for yourself, but don’t isolate yourself. Spend time with supportive, caring people.
- Eat and drink in moderation. Don’t drink alcohol if you are feeling down.
- Get exercise—even if it’s only taking a short walk.
- Make a to-do list. Keep things simple.
- Set reasonable expectations and goals for holiday activities such as shopping, cooking, entertaining, attending parties or sending holiday cards.
- Set a budget for holiday activities. Don’t overextend yourself financially with buying presents.
- Listen to music.
- Remember that holiday blues are short-term. Be patient. Take things week by week and day by day.

Beyond the Blues: When It Becomes Mental Illness

If symptoms of depression or anxiety last more than 2 or 3 weeks, it could indicate a more serious mental health problem. There are basic steps that a person experiencing symptoms or family members and friends can take. These are steps that can be taken any time of the year.

- Talk with your doctor (or pediatrician). A comprehensive physical exam needs to be part of assessment to rule out some physical causes.
- Get a referral to a mental health professional; a call from your doctor may help you to avoid a long waiting list.
- Educate yourself or recommend a resource to a person. Someone may know that something is off, but not recognize or understand symptoms or how to find help.
- If a friend or relative is showing symptoms, ask them privately how things are going. If needed, use a prompt like “You seem a little sad or frustrated. What’s been going on lately?” Don’t be judgmental or trivialize what they may be feeling.
- Offer to make the appointment for the person and accompany them to the doctor’s office or mental health clinic for moral support. It can make a big difference.
- Local NAMI affiliates can offer resources.

Recent Research Findings On The Genetic Basis Of Schizophrenia, Psychosis As A Learning And Memory Disorder, And Best Practices For Interventions

—Sent from Carol Lamont, member

Check out this New York Times article on how biology, psychology and social forces can all affect mental health and the best practice for intervention is not just medication, but also therapy: http://www.nytimes.com/2015/11/11/opinion/psychiatry/s-mind-brain-problem.html?smid=nytcore-ipad-share&smprod=nytcore-ipad

Finding a qualified therapist who is willing and able to work with those who have severe mental illness is a huge challenge. Many therapists only want to work with those that I call "the walking wounded," not those who are most seriously injured and who have the greatest need for therapy to help them become and remain stable and to rebuild their lives. Clearly we need more research not just on physical dysfunctionality of the brain, but also on the therapeutic and social interventions that are documented as evidenced based best practices.

I keep searching for answers to help my son and others suffering from severe mental illness. I recommend a recent webinar offered by the Brain and Behavior Research Foundation on New Insights into the Genetic Basis of Schizophrenia, that I found to be very informative: https://bbrfoundation.org/brain-matters-discoveries/new-insights-into-the-genetic-basis-of-schizophrenia. BBRF offers much info on recent research findings and studies underway: https://bbrfoundation.org/discoveries

On Tuesday I tuned in for another amazing webinar on what scientists are learning about our brains, and how they can become dysfunctional. For too long we focused on investing in what we could learn about outerspace, and finally with Obama’s big investment we are learning about our inserspace, how the brain works and what happens when it doesn’t work. This is the most recent webinar by the Brain & Behavior Research Foundation on the latest findings of nationally funded research for answers: https://bbrfoundation.org/meet-the-scientist-november-2015.

Matthew was not violent at all, and largely kept to himself. His appearance could be off-putting — he kept a long beard, did not cut his hair and smoked heavily. We constantly feared that a police officer might misunderstand his condition and that he could end up injured or killed; we also at times prayed that he would get arrested and could have the happy ending that Pete Earley describes in his powerful book “Crazy,” when a compassionate judge offered assisted outpatient treatment for his delusional son.

We tried everything to help Matthew, from acceptance and enabling to tough love, but the trajectory was not a good one and its ending has scarred and devastated our lives forever. I cannot say with certainty that if we had been able to force treatment on Matthew, including anti-psychotic medications, that he would have survived. In addition to suffering from anosognosia, Matthew became very religious after his break, embracing his Judaism, keeping kosher, and he was convinced that taking medication was dishonorable and would offend God.

But I do know that for many, treatment saves lives. The true insanity is that our laws leave those who suffer to fend for themselves. But Congress is now ready to grapple with the issue in a bipartisan bill introduced by Tim Murphy, a Republican from Pennsylvania and the only clinical psychologist in the House, and Eddie Bernice Johnson, a Democrat from Texas who is a psychiatric nurse.

The bill is not perfect. But it does many things to improve the financing, treatment and delivery of services across the range of mental illnesses, and in particular it has provisions aimed directly at helping those like my son.

Most critically, the Murphy-Johnson bill provides incentives to fund expanded treatment, called assisted outpatient treatment, or A.O.T., only for those with a long history and pattern of proving a danger to themselves or others. The specifics of A.O.T. vary by state, but judges can order patients to undergo treatment while they live in the community instead of in prison or a hospital. It has been proven to reduce crime by or against those with illnesses, as well as suicide. In some states, the treatment is ordered through the intervention of medical professionals or law enforcement; families do have to be involved. In many states, families can petition the court directly based on the likelihood that their loved one has a grave disability or condition.

But A.O.T. is not carte blanche: It still requires court action and has strict criteria to limit treatment to the most seriously ill. Five states, including Maryland, where my son spent most of his life, currently do not have such treatment; in those states that do, the options are often limited. The bill’s provision is a carrot, not a stick, to encourage states to create or expand A.O.T. by providing bonus money in block grants for those that do.

The bill would also create a new position at the Department of Health and Human Services, an assistant secretary for mental health and substance abuse, and put the existing dysfunctional agency, known as the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (Samhsa), under his or her supervision. Samhsa has used much of its budget to deal with less pernicious conditions like trauma and stress. It has also funded activist groups that oppose medication and mainstream psychiatric care for the seriously mentally ill.

The bill, which will soon be taken up by the full Energy and Commerce Committee, has broad support — but not broad enough. A majority of the Democrats on the committee oppose the changes to Samhsa and vigorously oppose any move to assisted outpatient treatment. Their concerns are focused on civil liberties and are sincere but they come from failure to grasp the deeper traumas that can destroy lives. This bill does not return us to the time when we could easily lock someone up in a horrific asylum, and it balances the rights of patients with an opportunity for loved ones and professionals to help those incapable of helping themselves. The bill tries carefully to avoid coercive means and leaves protection to the courts to prevent or minimize abuses.

Nothing will bring back my son, and nothing can erase the pain of his loss. But action by Congress would help keep other parents and siblings from suffering as we have.

Status And Prognosis Of Hr 3717, The Helping Families In Mental Health Crisis Act

— Sent from Carol Lamont, member

I checked out the govtrack website for status and prognosis of HR 3717, The Helping Families In Mental Health Crisis Act and found they give it a 1% chance of becoming law – because of how few bills get through this Congress: https://www.govtrack.us/congress/bills/114/hr2646

This is sickening! We must push harder and further to get the help our loved ones need.

Yesterday, this bill gained a new Cosponsor: Rep. Jackie Speier [D-CA14] The bill now has 163 cosponsors (117 Republicans, 46 Democrats). Please reach out to other Congresspersons to beg them to cosponsor HR 3717 now.
