OPERATIONS IN FRANCE
SEPTEMBER 1944

NARRATIVE

The first part of September was much like the last week of August - long moves in approach march formations with infantry riding on all available vehicles. The usual order of march consisted of an advance guard having as the point elements of the cavalry reconnaissance troop the support of a platoon of tanks and one of Tank-Destroyers with a company or less of infantry riding on the armored vehicles. The remainder of the advance guard battalion following in organic infantry vehicles (kitchen and supply trucks or Anti-Tank or Cannon Company prime movers). The direct support artillery Battalion came next with an Infantry Battalion loaded on the prime movers, ammunition trucks and A.A.A.A.W vehicles. The other Infantry Battalion was either moved up by shuffling or on the vehicles of a reinforcing artillery Battalion.

This method of motorizing an Infantry Division proved effective as contact was never lost for long. Many Germans got away but not necessarily because we were not mobile, rather because there simply was not enough troops to cover all of the roads leading out of southern and central France.

On September 1st the Battalion had the opportunity to fire from the hip, so to speak, our observers picked up some enemy who were moving out while the 132nd was just pulling into position. Fire commands were computed at "B" and "C" Battery positions from map locations by inspection while the Battery was being layed. Effective fire was delivered with observers communicating directly to the Batteries by radio and fire commands relayed to guns by voice over a 300 yard battery front.
The period September 2 to 7 consisted of motor movement to get into position to cut off the enemy again. The Battalion with the Combat Team marched 213 miles from September 1st to 7th inclusive. Much time was lost and distance added due to enemy destruction of bridges.

September 8th found the Battalion in position near Byans (67.1 - 41.2) (114 J) and the Infantry crossing the Doubs River under mild protest from the enemy. The Battalion deployed to the Northeast near the town of Boussieres (20.2 - 46.0) (114 K) still on the left bank of the Doubs about noon in order to adequately support the Regiment in its mission of securing the bridge site and blocking the roads from the South and West into Besancon.

During the day of September 8th several observed missions were fired on hostile troops and weapons. Enemy resistance was stubborn for a few hours at several points; the attack was carried on during the night and the Battalion displaced forward during the early morning hours of September 9th.

The new positions were in the vicinity of Villers - Buzon (662 53.5) (114 J) about 12 kilometers West of Besancon. We crossed the Doubs on a bridge constructed by the 11th Engineer Battalion at the site of a destroyed bridge. These positions were occupied in the early morning hours in an area that had not been patrolled by the Infantry, but no enemy were encountered.

These moves in the early morning following a night attack keep one on the alert. It sometimes takes days to mop up the small groups of enemy that are bypassed or scattered during the night by our Infantry. As an illustration on this morning the Battalion made an effective road block and captured a German officer and his driver who came speeding up to a road junction, having driven through our front, just as a prime-mover and howitzer filled the road making the corner. The Jerry had to stop; the road was full. Later on Major Snow Commanding Officer, 155th Field Artillery Battalion, who was reinforcing our fire came up on reconnaissance. The Commanding Officer of 132nd suggested that he have a platoon of the Reconnaissance Troop precede him or accompany him. This was arranged and the platoon found approximately 200 German soldiers in the proposed position area. They were mostly Turkmen and ready to give up and were brought in. There are not many dull moments when one is in pursuit.

Resistance in this area ceased by the 10th. From the 11th to 14th inclusive our activities consisted of moving and waiting to move - the Regimental Combat Team being in Division or Corps reserve. The Division during this time captured Vesoul and moved on toward Luxeuil and St. Loup.

On September 15th the Battalion was in position in the vicinity of Betoncourt (K 00.5 - L1.0) supporting the 112nd Infantry in the mission of cutting the roads leading into Luxeuil from the South and East. The 111st Field Artillery Battalion was reinforcing our fires. Considerable resistance was developed on this mission but was cleared up and Luxeuil was occupied by September 16th. The Battalion displaced for short distances three times during this period.

On September 15th "C" Battery received counter-battery fire from an enemy tank. Eight men were wounded and one died that day. Three guns were damaged slightly but only one had to be replaced. This tank was with a force that had not been discovered during the advance of the night before and it fired from a concealed position, then moved out.

The bathing in Luxeuil Les Bains was short lived. After the resistance in the vicinity of Fadden (K 09.5 - 21.5) was cleared up the Battalion moved to the Northeast on the evening of September 19th carrying the 3rd Battalion 112nd Infantry on its prime movers. The mission was to seize Remiremont (K 17.5 L1.5) as some report had been received that it was not occupied by the enemy. Upon contacting elements of Reconnaissance Troops of 636th Tank Destroyer Battalion in vicinity of (K 095 - L35) and getting the latest information first hand the Infantry was dismounted and the Battalion put in position in that area. The Infantry Battalion proceeded on foot approximately 4000 yards toward Remiremont that night with out contact and organized the position for the night. Road blocks were set up around the artillery positions.

On the morning of September 20 the remainder of the Regimental Combat Team moved out and the attack on Remiremont was on. The 3rd Battalion advancing from West to East and the 1st and 2nd Battalions from the South. The 111st Field Artillery Battalion supported the 1st Battalion principally and reinforced the fires of the 132nd Field Artillery Battalion generally. The distance between the 3rd Battalion and the other Battalions and the 132nd and 111st Field Artillery Battalion made for independent action during the early phases of the attack.

Stubborn enemy resistance was encountered at well placed road blocks by all three battalions and bitter fire fights developed in the woods.

On September 20 the Battalion displaced forward in order to be in better position to fire on enemy convoys that night by moving in or out of Remiremont and to improve our position from a communications standpoint.

Remiremont fell on September 22nd. The 141st Infantry had previously forced a crossing over the Moselle about four miles North of Remiremont.

The bridge of Remiremont was completed early on September 24th and the Battalion displaced to positions in the vicinity of Eloyes still in direct support of 142nd Infantry who continued the attack to the Northeast.

The enemy contested the enlargement of the bridge-head over the Moselle bitterly through-out the remainder of the month. Our Infantry engaged in bitter small arms fights for each important piece of terrain or road junction. Movement to the North was not contested very much but he seems to have a deinate line generally North and South in the foot hills of the Vesage Mountains. Positions in this line are supported by artillery. On some days during this period our troops were under extremely heavy artillery fire. The German also launched several local counter-attacks - one at least in Regimental strength. All were beaten back.

The end of the month found the Battalion still in position near Eloyes. It looks like it could be another winter like 43-44.

REPORT OF CASUALTIES

CLARENCE N. LYTKE

CLARENCE N. LYTKE, ASN 0-24,601, Captain, Headquarters, 132nd Field Artillery Battalion, lightly wounded in action, 1545 hours, Wednesday 27 September 1944, near Tendon, France, coordinates: 212 - 453, sheet 15-K, 1:100,000 map, France.

In very recent operations in France casualties have been very heavy in the Infantry. All battalions have been operating under-strength. In many cases Artillery officer observers have found themselves in positions where they have had to act as Infantry officers besides directing artillery. It was just such a situation as this that confronted Captain LYTKE, Liaison officer with the 3rd Battalion, 142nd Infantry Regiment, when the 3rd Battalion was advancing through the heavy wood land section of Tendon. Shortly before 1400 hours, Wednesday 27 September 1944, the battalion had dropped off one company to set up a road block and proceeded on with the plan of reorganizing on the far slope of Hill 627. The remaining elements of the 3rd Battalion were moving forward when scouts reported large numbers of German infantry up ahead. The companies had just started to deploy when they were subjected to heavy mortar fire - believed to have been 120 mm. Several men and officers were wounded - including the Battalion Commander. Captain LYTKE and also

besides directing very effective artillery fire helped to organize the companies into a defensive position and succeeded in holding the ground. Captain

LYTKE was thrown to the ground by the force of the same shell that wounded the Battalion Commander. He suffered injuries to his left shoulder and head.

Captain LYTKE remained on duty to help organize an all around defense. He was later treated for his injuries and given relief. Captain LYTKE holds the Silver Star for gallantry in action in Italy, and also the Purple Heart for wounds received during the Italian Campaign. He was twice wounded on 16 August 1944 - the day after the invasion of Southern France.

Captain Lyke is 27 years of age. Born 2 June 1917. He was commissioned 2nd Lt. 20 February 1942 and promoted to rank of Captain 5 August 1944.

Next of Kin: Mrs. Ruth S. Lyke, (Wife) 5126 W. Roosevelt Drive, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

RAFF P. FERGUSON, ASN 6959192, Private, Headquarters Battery, 132nd Field Artillery Battalion, lightly wounded in action, 1545 hours, Wednesday 27 September 1944, near Tendon, France, coordinates: 212-453, sheet 15-H, 1:100,000 map, France.

Private Ferguson, radio operator with the 3rd Liaison Section, received lacerations of the hands from mortar fragmentation while on duty with his section. About the same time Captain Clare H. Lyke, Liaison officer, and Private Rayburn L. Rushing, also on the section, were lightly wounded. The 3rd Liaison section was moving forward with the 3rd Battalion, 132nd Infantry Regiment. One re-inforced company had been dropped off to set up a road block.

The battalion planned to assemble on the far slope of Hill 827. As the battalion advanced scouts reported large numbers of Germans up ahead. The companies deployed for attack just as a heavy concentration of mortars was directed at them. Several officers and men were hit during the shelling that ensued. Private Ferguson was thrown down by the force of the shelling and received lacerations of both hands from fragmentation. The 3rd Section was relieved shortly after this and Private Ferguson was treated and returned to duty.

Private Ferguson is 23 years of age. Born 1 September 1921. He enlisted in the Service 29 June 1941.

Next of Kin: Mrs Bertha M. Ferguson, (Mother) 121 R. East Miller Street, Jefferson City, Missouri.

SUBJECT: Historical Records and History of Organization

TO: Commanding General, 36th Infantry Division,
A.P.O. # 56, U. S. Army

1. Submitted herewith the report of 132nd Field Artillery Battalion Historical Records and Histories of organization covering action of this Battalion during the period 1-31 October 1944. This report is submitted in compliance with letter dated 20 April 1943, Allied Force Headquarters, APO # 512, Subject: Historical Records and Histories of organization, wrapper endorsement dated 21 September 1943, Headquarters, 36th Infantry Division dated 28 November 1943 and letter dated 20 May 1944, Headquarters, 36th Infantry Division, Subject: Historical Records and Histories of organizations and letter dated 1 September 1944, Headquarters 36th Infantry Division, Subject: Historical Records and Histories of Organizations and letter dated 28 September 1944, Headquarters, 36th Infantry Division, Subject: Historical Records.

2. Nothing outstanding was developed during the past month. Rather I think long established principles were again demonstrated.

   a. Tired soldiers advance slowly if at all.

   b. Fire power should be used to the maximum. Fires should be observed, to achieve maximum effect.

   c. Artillery ammunition was very limited and the units operated over wide fronts making limited objective attacks in most difficult terrain. Visibility was generally poor.

3. All factors seemed to bring us up against the law of diminishing returns.

OPERATIONS IN FRANCE

OCTOBER 1944

HISTORICAL

The first of the month found the Battalion in position in the vicinity of Eloyes, France, on the East bank of the Roselle River. These positions had been occupied since 21 September 1944, and aside from a few harassing rounds directed at the town and highway no artillery fire was received. All three infantry battalions of the 142nd Infantry were engaged with the enemy, and action in all sectors was characterized by stubborn resistance, including heavy artillery and mortar fire. After forty-five days of combat the effective strength of the infantry companies had been greatly reduced through casualties and fatigue. The fighting in the dense woods of the Vosges mountains was very difficult for the infantry, and because of the poor terrain our observers could give only limited support.

On the 4th of October the front lines had become fairly well defined. Our battalion displaced to positions previously occupied by the 131st Field Artillery Battalion - some four thousand yards west of the front lines. Our mission was that of direct support of the 142nd Infantry Regiment; whose mission was to form defensive positions in the vicinity the battalions now occupied. Our battalion remained in this position until 13 October. During this time the infantry improved and consolidated their defensive positions. Our battalion did very little firing, due to lack of suitable targets and curtailed ammunition allowance.

Replacements for the infantry battalions were brought in and the battalions were relieved one at a time to assimilate and train their new men. This lull in the action of our regiment gave men of our battalion an opportunity to get cleaned up and take advantage of what recreation facilities were available. Small groups from each battery were transported daily to bathe and see a moving picture.
On the 5th October the liaison officers, who had been on continuous duty with the infantry battalions, were relieved by battery commanders of Battery "A", Battery "C" and the regimental Liaison officer, respectively. Two of the liaison officers took over temporary jobs as battery commanders; the third going to regimental Liaison.

On the 15th October the battalion displaced to the Northeast about seven miles and occupied positions three hundred yards Northeast of Houx. This position was about twenty-five hundred yards behind the front lines; but the battalion had both sight and flash defilade from the enemy. The occupation of this position was made necessary when the 142nd Regimental Combat Team relieved the 143rd Regimental Combat Team positions in addition to its present positions. At this time an eight thousand meter defensive front was being held by the 142nd Infantry Regiment.

Although our battery positions had good defilade, our nearness to the front lines made it possible for the enemy to determine our approximate location by sound and occasional light harassing fire was received. This fire was very ineffective and we had only one slightly wounded casualty in this area for the whole period. However, the town of Houx, through which all of our communications and supplies had to come, was under enemy observation. This restricted our movement into and out of the battalion area as the town was subjected to intermittent harassing fire almost every day. As time was available gun pits were improved and all gun sections constructed elaborate underground shelters for the gun crews. The positions were on the side of a ridge line making the drainage of the wet ground an easy job.

On the 22nd October an additional forty-five hundred meter defensive sector was taken over by the 142nd Infantry when it relieved the 30th Infantry of the 3rd Division on our right flank. The 3rd Battalion, 142nd Infantry, with Company "B", 111th Engineer Battalion, 30th Cavalry Reconnaissance Troops, Reconnaissance Platoon, 656th Tank Destroyers Battalion and Regimental "I" and "K" Platoons occupied this sector. To accompany this force we sent out an additional liaison officer and two sergeants experienced as forward observers to man two additional observation points. A liaison officer was also sent to the French Artillery Headquarters on our right and an observer sent to man an OP in the French sector as protection for our right flank.

The end of the month found the 142nd Infantry Regiment in a defensive position along a twelve thousand, five hundred meter front, and our battalion from the position occupied on 15 October covering twenty two hundred mil sector. At this time we had four liaison officers, nine forward observers (two of which were Sergeants) with the Infantry. During the latter part of the month the amount of firing that was done was governed by the daily ammunition allocations, and this was very small - as low as ten rounds per gun per day. However, as the action on the front consisted only of patrolling, very few fires were necessary.

The Battalion Motor Maintenance sections made the most of this period of relative inactivity. An excellently situated motor maintenance shop was set up and a program of six thousand mile maintenance checks began on the 4th of October. The Battalion motor maintenance section worked in conjunction with the Batteries' maintenance sections at the battalion shop; during the next twenty seven days 75% of the vehicles in the battalion had received a six thousand mile maintenance inspection. The Battalion maintenance section received special commendation from the Division Artillery Commander for their excellent work.

In general the action of this period can be characterized as a transition from the fast moving pursuit of the previous months to a situation in which the front lines were well defined; with stubborn resistance along the full front. Artillery action was limited by the poor observation possibilities in the wooded terrain in which the action took place and further by the restricted ammunition supplies.

Sgt. Moffitt

DECLASSIFIED PER EXECUTIVE ORDER
Pfc. Chambers was on duty with the forward observer party from Battery "A" with the 1st Battalion, 142nd Infantry when he was injured. Enemy artillery was falling in the area and Pvt. Chambers was on his stomach, keeping low. One shell entered the ground directly under him and failed to explode. Pvt. Chambers was not wounded but he suffered from shock and was returned to his organization after receiving treatment.

Pvt. 1st class Chambers is 25 years of age. Born 27 October 1918. He enlisted in the Service from Paris, Texas, 24 November 1940. Next of kin: Mr. Roland Chambers, Route #6, Paris, Texas. (Father)

There were no replacements received by this Battalion during the month of October.

SUBJECT: Historical Records and History of Organization

TO:Commanding General, 36th Infantry Division,
A.P.O. #36, U. S. Army

1. Submitted herewith the report of 152nd Field Artillery Battalion Historical Records and histories of organization covering action of this Battalion during the period 1-30 November 1944. This report is submitted in compliance with letter dated 20 April 1945, Allied Force Headquarters, APO #512, Subject: Historical Records and Histories of organization, wrapper endorsement dated 21 September 1945, Headquarters, 36th Infantry Division dated 28 November 1945 and letter dated 20 May 1944, Headquarters, 36th Infantry Division, Subject: Historical Records and Histories of organizations and letter dated 1 September 1944, Headquarters, 36th Infantry Division, Subject: Historical Records and Histories of Organizations and letter dated 28 September 1944, Headquarters, 36th Infantry Division, Subject: Historical Records and Circular Number 34, section IV, Headquarters Seventh Army, dated 20 November 1944, Subject: Handling of Historical Documents in Seventh Army.

2. The operations during the month demonstrated nothing new. Rather, I think further emphasized the fact that artillery fire is necessary, and it must be delivered accurately, in sufficient quantity, if our infantry is to advance and their casualties be reasonable. To illustrate: a small strong point in and around a house just north of Rahmant (V-25.2 17.2) was attacked several times unsuccessfully; by day and night without artillery support, and with only a small amount of artillery and mortar fire. This point was needed before a proposed attack was to be launched. A 3 inch howitzer in addition to a 105mm battery was adjusted on the house and the point was taken without much trouble by one platoon. (The 3 inch howitzer was fired within 150 yards of our own dug-in troops)
5. This should be given to prove with patrols if ammunition is to be used coherently. On one or two occasions preparations were fired early in the morning or unoccupied points which had been defended successfully by the enemy against company size attacks the evening before. (Contact cannot always be maintained in wooded mountainous terrain at night)

4. Close command liaison must be maintained and vigorous reconnaissances for positions be made to the front and flanks if possible.

5. This is especially true in a fluid situation such as characterized the latter part of the month. If this close contact is not maintained the action will either be delayed or the infantry will get out of range.

6. The combat efficiency remains high even after more than one hundred days of continuous action over about five hundred miles. However it may be said without paradoxic nature that romance has been completely stripped from modern warfare.

OPERATIONS IN FRANCE

NOVEMBER 1944

NARRATIVE

The beginning of the month found the Battalion in position in the vicinity of Noix in direct support of the 142nd Infantry Regiment which was holding a twelve thousand five hundred meter defensive front. These battery positions had been occupied since 13 October 1944, but due to relative inactivity of the front and restricted ammunition allowances little firing was done.

The remainder of the Division - including the 142nd Infantry (attached to the Division) was engaged in a aggressive action to the East of Bruyeres and considerable gains had been made in this sector.

On the 3rd November plans were initiated to employ the 142nd Regimental Combat Team to relieve the elements of the 141st and 142nd Infantry Regiments in Forêt Domaniale de Champ region. Reconnaissance was made for battery positions in the vicinity of La Rouge Baux and occupation completed the night of 3-4 November. There was really little choice in the selection of battery positions. Most of the terrain was heavily wooded hills with only a narrow wet valley which was already occupied by a light battalion and a battery of mediums. Gun positions were made possible by laying boards on the soft ground and building up emplacements around them.

The 142nd Infantry Regiment began their attack the morning of the 5th November through the difficult wooded terrain in the face of rain, sleet and snow. The progress was slow but satisfactory and by the 10th November the enemy had been cleared from the Forêt Domaniale de Champ. The Regiment was then ordered to attack to the South and reconnaissance for new positions was made further up the valley in an area just recently cleared by our troops.
The objectional features of this position were the extensive enemy mine fields in the area and the front lines being only one thousand five hundred yards to the East. However, there was plenty of time for the preparation of the positions and the mine fields were cleared with the aid of the Engineers. The positions were occupied the night of 13-14 November. Only the necessary equipment and personnel were taken to this position because of the limited space. The remainder of the Battalion remained in the La Rouge Raux area.

The attack of our Infantry to the South met with very little resistance. It was soon apparent that we would have to displace again and a reconnaissance was made on 14th November in an area southeast of Bruyères. Meanwhile, the battalion was given the mission of reinforcing fires of the 382nd Field Artillery Battalion of the 153rd Division which was making an attack on our left flank towards Ste. Die. This required our guns to be shifted to enable us to fire to the northeast, whereas, heretofore we had been firing to the South. The 93rd Armored Field Artillery Battalion took over the direct support of the 142nd Infantry Regiment. This mission was very easily accomplished by merely having the 93rd Field Artillery Battalion tune in on our primary radio channel.

The morning of the 16 November our battalion assisted in firing a preparation for the 103rd Division and at noon its reinforcing mission accomplished the battalion began displacing to positions south of Biffontaine. The new area afforded the batteries good gun positions and also contained enough houses so that most of the men could get inside, away from the elements, part of the time.

The action during this period had been bringing us closer and closer to what was considered the German Winter Defense Line. Many of the villages and farms immediately in front of this line had been destroyed by demolition and burning, and mines and booby traps were in perfusion.

On the 19th November reconnaissance was made east of Cercieux in which area care was taken to search for mines and booby traps. These positions were occupied on the 20th November at which time the battalion's mission was one of reinforcing the fires of the 133rd Field Artillery Battalion and the 131st Field Artillery Battalion. The 142nd Infantry Regiment had withdrawn to a rest area. Our Liaison and Forward Observers returned to the battalion for a short rest during this period.
The remainder of the period to be concerned with the push through the German Winter Line, and the throwing back of the enemy to the Rhine Valley. The situation in the Vosges Mountains sector on the 30th November consisted of the French Army breaking through the Belfort Gap in the South and reaching Mulhouse and the Rhine River. In the Northern part of the sector the 2nd and 10th divisions had broken through the German Winter Line and out-flanked Stébic. The force to the North of these units were making favorable gains to the East towards Strasbourg.

The combination of the successes to the North and South threatened the entire enemy defenses in the Vosges and a general enemy withdrawal was anticipated. Plans were initiated for the pursuit of the enemy by motorizing the 112th Infantry Combat Team. Our battalion was to accompany this motorized task force and render continuous support by leap-frogging the batteries. The detailed plan had Battery "A" accompanying the 1st Battalion, 112th Infantry, which was spear-heading the attack.

The motor movement began on the 3rd December with Battery "A" accompanying the 1st Battalion. Only the necessary vehicles were taken on this movement. This included the prime movers, one wire truck, the fifth section and two armament trucks. In addition a skeleton Fire Direction Center crew, in a 608 radio car, accompanied this battery. The remainder of the battalion — including Battery "B" (Self-Propelled 105mm) from the 753rd Tank Battalion which was attached to us for this operation, remained in the present position East of Cernay.

The column advanced to the vicinity of Marday - a distance of five miles - where it encountered heavy mine fields defended by ground troops, artillery and flak weapons. Our troops were forced to de-truck and advanced by foot in an effort to drive out the enemy. Battery "A" was put into position in the West edge of the town of Marday early the morning of the 27th November. During the morning of the same day the Battery Commanders of the other batteries were brought forward and a position for one other battery was selected. Battery "B" occupied this position during the afternoon and at the request of the Regimental Commander the other batteries were not brought forward at this time because of the poor road conditions and the scarcity of battery positions.

During the day the foot troops made very good advances and a forward displacement of the artillery was in order. However, the only route forward in our sector could not be used due to mine fields, enemy artillery and snipers. Late in the afternoon a route through the sector of the unit on our left was found in a reconnaissance made for positions in the vicinity of Han de Inveline. The batteries were all brought up and put into position the night of 24-25 November.

The progress of the infantry was fairly rapid, however the scattered resistance and road blocks made continuance of the motorized movement impracticable. One such road block was encountered where the highway passes over the peak of the Voges mountains. This consisted of a strong physical block of timber and rocks and defended by approximately 100 troops with automatic weapons and two anti-tank guns. Artillery fire was adjusted on this block preceding the attack by our Infantry, and about 350 rounds were dumped on this one target. After this preparation the road block was over-run and easily cleared. About forty prisoners were taken and one of the 75mm Anti-Tank guns had been destroyed by a direct hit. This opened the way for another quick advance by our troops. These advances were not made on the highway, but by forced marches on the ridges parallel to and North of the highway. In this manner the enemy in Ste Marie aux Mines and Ste Croix aux Mines (a distance of 8 and 10 miles respectively from the road block) were outflanked and surprised. Ste Marie aux Mines was completely cleared the same day and fighting was still going on in the Eastern half of Ste Croix.

Early the morning of 26 November Batteries "A", "B" and "C" moved forward five thousand yards to positions in the vicinity of Wissembach and Battery "K" with skeleton Fire Direction Center crew moved up to Ste Marie aux Mines. During the same day the remainder of the battalion moved up to the latter town. Due to the scarcity of positions one battery found it necessary to set up "parade style" in the town square. Battery "C" of the 155th Field Artillery Battalion (medium) was attached to the battalion and put into position in the same vicinity. This battery was fired through our Fire Direction Center with the aid of one of their computers.

During the afternoon action flared up in Ste Croix aux Mines as our troops attempted to clear the town. This action was centered around two tanks and about forty enemy infantry. An infantry company commander using telephone communications adjusted the fire of one of our guns on the tanks which were about two hundred yards in front of him. After about thirty rounds of HE, hits and near misses, while not destroying the tanks forced one of the crews to abandon their tank. The officer adjusting the fire then called for a couple of rounds of white phosphorus smoke while he brought up his own armor. The scheme worked perfectly with our tank.
moving up under the smoke screen and knocking out the enemy tanks at point-blank range. The afternoon of the same day our infantry moved into position on the high ground north of Husloch about one mile East of Ste Croix. Our Forward Observer accompanying this group observed approximately one hundred enemy personnel and some vehicles in the vicinity of Husloch. One battery was adjusted on the target and the battalion fired a total of 475 rounds for effect. This caused the enemy heavy casualties and completely disorganized the remainder enabling our troops to occupy the village and take some seventy prisoners.

As we approach the Rhine Valley enemy resistance seems to be stiffening, although poorly organized. In order for us to give close support to our Infantry units it was necessary to keep the batteries as close behind the Infantry as possible. This was difficult to do at times because of the scarcity of suitable battery positions along the narrow valley in which the action took place. The next displacement therefore was made by moving the two rear batteries to positions about five thousand yards forward in the vicinity of Husloch. With these two batteries a separate Fire Direction Center crew was sent along. The other two light batteries and the medium battery remained in Ste Croix with the remainder of the Fire Direction Center.

On the 30th November another leap-frog movement was made by displacement of Battery "B" and Battery "C" of the 133rd Field Artillery Battalion (Attached to us) to positions in vicinity of Ieperve. Another skeleton Fire Direction Center crew was sent forward with this group. The primary mission of these two batteries was to support the 2nd Battalion of the 133rd Infantry which was operating in our sector. To accomplish this mission a radio from the 133rd Field Artillery Battalion went forward with this Fire Direction Center. A radio with our channel also monitored our radio net so as to be able to fire any missions which were out of range with the rear batteries. Wire communication between the two Fire Direction Centers made for complete coordination and the battalion functioned efficiently firing six batteries through two Fire Direction Centers.

One striking feature of the period was the demonstrated flexibility of our artillery. At one time our role was changed from direct support to reinforcing while another battalion took over our direct support mission merely by switching on our radio channel. Another instance was the efficient handling of four, five and even six batteries by the battalion at one time. The use of two Fire Direction Centers in the leap-frog displacements, which were necessary in the latter part of the period is a further example of flexibility.

The weather elements have been rather kind to us the latter part of the month and most of the time we have managed to find shelter for our troops. These combined with the recent successes have kept morale and efficiency at a high level despite our one hundred and eight days of continuous combat duty.

The end of the month finds us on the eastern slopes of the Vosges Mountains with observation points looking across the Rhine River into Germany.

Prepared under the direction of the Battalion Commander.

BATTERY "A"
KILLED IN ACTION

NEWTON E. BEVILLE, ASN 208314007, Private 1st Class, Battery "A", 132nd Field Artillery Battalion, killed in action, 0500 hours, Sunday 26 November 1944, coordinates 62.60 - 66.20, France, 1:50,000 map, sheet XLVII - 17, Seientat.

Private 1st Class Beville was a member of the artillery liaison section with the 1st Battalion, 122nd Infantry. On the morning of Sunday 26 he was stationed at 1st Battalion C.P. Around 0500 he was to leave the building. Pvt. Beville was carrying a rifle at the time. He had not gone far when a figure approached him. Beville pulled back the bolt of his rifle - evidently preparing to challenge. The figure approaching him was another American soldier, and he taking Private Beville for an enemy grabbed his rifle. In the scuffle that followed Beville's gun went off wounding the other man in one leg. The other soldier, still thinking him to be an enemy, shot Beville twice in the stomach. Private 1st Class Beville died shortly after.

Beville was 31 years of age. Born 22 September 1915.
He enlisted in the Service 24 November 1940.
Next of Kin: Mr. James J. Beville (Father), Route 21, Petty, Texas.

Private Chambers was on his way to the latrine when he either tripped a booby trap or stepped on a loose board that had a grenade with a loose pin tied to it causing a grenade to go off. Fragmentation from the exploding grenade... went through the clothing on the inner part of his right leg and skinned his leg slightly. He was treated and remained on duty.

Pvt. Chambers is 23 years of age. Born 27 October 1914.
He enlisted in the Service 24 November 1914.
Next of Kin: Mr. and Mrs. Roland Chambers (parents), Route #6, Paris, Texas

SERIOUSLY WOUNDED IN ACTION

LEON G. PIERCE, ASN 0-1106266, 1st Lt., Battery "B", 152nd Field Artillery Battalion, seriously wounded in action, 1200 hours, Sunday 5 November 1918, Coordinates: 23° 59' 11" N, 00° 00' 00" W, Sheet XXIV - 18, Druyeres, France.

1st Lt. Pierce was an Artillery Forward Observer with the 2nd Battalion, 119th Infantry. He had accompanied "B" Company in occupying the high ground, and was digging in when an enemy shell - believed to be from a tank - hit a tree about twenty feet from his position. Lt. Pierce was hit in the back and the right shoulder blade. He was unable to move on his own power due to temporary paralization and had to be carried quite a distance by two men of his section to obtain medical aid. He received medical attention and was evacuated.

1st Lt. Pierce is 25 years of age. Born 25 March 1919. He was commissioned 2nd Lt. 10 April 1917 and 1st Lt. 27 September 1918.
Next of Kin: Mr. Webb Pierce, Monroeville, Alabama.

There were three officers and one enlisted man received by this Battalion as replacements during the month of November 1918.

All replacements have been very satisfactory.

HEADQUARTERS 132ND FIELD ARTILLERY BATTALION
A.P.O. #36, U. S. ARMY

7 February 1945

OPERATIONS IN FRANCE

JANUARY 1945

NARRATIVE

The beginning of the year 1945 finds the 132nd Field Artillery Battalion in the vicinity of Strasbourg, on the West bank of the Rhine River. The mission of the Battalion was that of reinforcing the fires of the 33rd Field Artillery Brigade. The general situation was defensive and the sector, all along the Rhine was quiet. All of the Infantry Regiments of the 36th Division were in a rest and training area to the rear, and our battalion was on a six hour alert to rejoin the Division. Although there was little activity in our sector - there were plenty of rumors circulating concerning the German advances in Northern Alsace, and many civilians were already evacuating the city of Strasbourg.

On 3 January 1945, at 1330, the Battalion was ordered to rejoin the 36th Infantry Division in the vicinity of Saverne or Sarrebourg. At 1530 we were on the road and arrived at Saverne at 1730 where we were instructed by Military Police to proceed to Sarrebourg. After some delay in the latter town an officer who had been sent ahead contacted us and informed the Battalion Commander that the Division was moving to the vicinity of Montbronn, in the Bitche sector, and giving us the route which we were to follow. At 0200 the march was resumed to Montbronn. This difficult march through darkness and cold was completed about 0530. The assistant S-3 met us in the vicinity of Montbronn and took the Battery Commanders on reconnaissance of positions which he had selected. These positions were actually an assembly area; but the guns were put in firing position as the enemy was well within range. During the morning another position area was assigned in the vicinity of St. Louis les Bitche and reconnaissance was completed by noon. During the afternoon the batteries occupied these positions. Our present mission was that of reinforcing the fires of the 131st Field Artillery Battalion as the 114th Infantry Regiment was the only Infantry Regiment in the lines. The activity on our immediate front was negligible; but the front was more or less "on edge", in as much as the enemy was putting strong pressure to the North and Southeast of us.

The preparation of the gun pits was made difficult by frozen ground and hilly terrain in our area. Further, in two of the battery areas there were no buildings or shelter of any kind. However, with the aid of some dynamite, logs and a lot of pick and shovel work by the gun crews excellent dug-in gun pits and dugouts with over head cover were soon constructed.

On 6 January the 114th Infantry Regiment relieved the 114th Infantry Regiment, and our forward observers were committed with the infantry. The sector remained quiet until 8 January 1945 when the 1st Battalion made a limited objective attack to improve the positions. The attack was successful and the anticipated counter-attack, which developed the next morning was beaten off with heavy casualties to the enemy. The 114th Infantry Regiment was relieved by the 114th Infantry Regiment and our mission changed to reinforcing the fires of the 133rd Field Artillery Battalion. Our immediate front again quieted down, but in as much as the enemy's intents and capabilities was questionable a switch position to the South was selected and partially prepared.

The plans for an attack to the Northeast were also prepared. However, before any action could be taken in either direction the 114th Regimental Combat Team was alerted to move to the sector of the 103rd Infantry Division, in the vicinity of Sarreguemines. The plans, including the route and destination to an assembly point, were drawn up on the night of 13 January 1945 and the march begun the next morning at 0400. The Battalion was given the mission of general support and reinforcing the fires of the 383rd Field Artillery Battalion; while the mission of the 114th Infantry Regiment was that of reserve. Reconnaissance was made in the vicinity of Metzingen where we were to occupy positions vacated by the 383rd Field Artillery Battalion. The Battalion got a break this time in as much as the positions were already prepared, wire installations in and enough houses in the area to accommodate the personnel. The front, generally between Sarreguemines and Forbach, was very quiet and few missions were fired.

The 103rd Infantry Division was being relieved by the 70th Infantry Division, who were being supported by the 69th and 93rd Armored Field Artillery Battalions. On the night of 16 January 1945 the 383rd Field Artillery Battalion (103rd Infantry Division) was scheduled to move. However, the 93rd Armored Field Artillery Battalion which was to relieve them had not been released from their mission in the Haguenau area. This necessitated the displacement of our battalion on very short notice to take over the positions and direct support missions of the 383rd Field Artillery Battalion. This was done between 2100 – 2100 the night of 16 January 1945, and included bringing up our liaison and forward observer parties to the supported infantry – 276th Infantry Regiment. The next day the 93rd Armored Field Artillery Battalion arrived and relieved us of the mission and positions during the late afternoon. Batteries moved back, as they were relieved, to their previous positions at Metzing.

At 0100, 16 January 1945 warning order was received for the Battalion to be ready to move at 0800 to a destination in the Haguenau area. A quartering party was sent out the next morning and the route to Saverne, where a guide was to meet us, was announced. The motor movement began at 1100 under the command of the Battalion S-3. The Battalion Commander and the Battalion S-2 rode ahead. Upon arriving at Fenestrange, ahead of the Battalion, Lt. Col. Green was informed by the Military Police that the destination of the 142nd Regimental Combat Team had been changed from Saverne to Durstel (HQ 602). The Battalion was rerouted and taken to an assembly area in the vicinity of Bettemiller where it was pulled off the road to await further orders. At first it was thought we would occupy our old positions in the vicinity of Montbronn which was nearby. However, at 1500 the orders were received to continue the march to Haguenau beginning at 2000. In the mean time dinner was cooked and served. The march was resumed at 2030 and the Battalion arrived in an assembly area in the Southern part of Haguenau at 2400. Lt. Col. Green proceeded immediately to the 36th Infantry Division Artillery CP where he was given orders to occupy positions in the vicinity of Camp de Oberhoffen immediately. Lt. Col. Green with the Battery Commanders left at 0530 and the Battalion, under the command of the Battalion Executive, followed at 0700. At 0600 the Battalion was in position and ready to fire having completed an 18 hour 80 mile motor march. The Haguenau sector which we had just moved into was an extremely active one. Since the first of the year the enemy has exerted considerable pressure on the Northern Alsace sector forcing withdrawals on the part of our troops. As we enter the sector the situation is somewhat confused.

On 20 January 1945 one infantry regiment - the 113rd Infantry Regiment - was in the line in the Corps right flank between Rohrwiler and Weyersheim. Our mission was that of reinforcing the fires of the 133rd Field Artillery Battalion. On the same day plans were made to carry out a major withdrawal from North of the Haguenau Forest to a line running along the Moder River generally West through Haguenau. This necessitated a hasty displacement on our part. During the afternoon the Battalion displaced to positions in the vicinity of Gislertheim. In our sector three infantry battalions were in the line and each had a battalion of artillery in direct support of it. In addition there were from one to three light field artillery battalions reinforcing these fires, as well as a medium battalion. Therefore when the enemy reacted to our withdrawal and began making probing attacks to test the strength of our front we were able to crack down on him quickly with a large mass of artillery fire. After making two or three probing attacks and suffering heavy casualties the enemy seemed no longer inclined to continue his offensive action in our sector. At the same time an estimated one thousand enemy troops secured a temporary bridge head across the Moder - Northwest of Haguenau. This was also counter attacked and the enemy driven back across the river with heavy casualties.

The strengthening of our front, combined with the Allied successes on the other fronts seems to have changed the enemy's intentions in our sector. During the remainder of the month he appears to go on the defensive, and from all indications his Panzer Divisions are withdrawing from our front. As soon as this was realized by our commanders we again became more aggressive, and at the close of the month the Battalion occupied positions in the vicinity of Bischwiller in preparation for an attack to the North and East. At first appearances the month would be characterized by the old Army expression "SHAKU". However, on closer inspection and when considering the role played by the 36th Infantry Division - the 112nd Infantry Regimental Combat Team in particular - it can be seen that our Army Commanders were engaged in a mighty game of military chess; in which the 36th Infantry Division played the roll of the "Queen". Most of the period we were in Corps or Army reserve subject to action on any part of the Army sector. At the first of the month we saw action on the 7th Army right flank at Strasbourg; then to the middle of the front in the vicinity of Bitch; later to the left flank in the vicinity of Sarreguemines, and finally back to the right flank again Southeast of Haguenau. The fact that all of these difficult moves and operations were made without detering incidents - despite the hardships of winter - is a credit to all personnel of the command.

OPERATIONS IN FRANCE

NARRATIVE

The beginning of the month of February finds the Battalion in position Southwest of Bischwiller, France, with the enemy front lines about 1500 yards to the North and East. This relatively "close up" position was occupied in preparation to support the attack of the 112nd Infantry Regiment. In reviewing the events of the previous period it will be recalled that during the month of January the units of the VI Corps had withdrawn in the face of enemy troops and armor. At the end of the month a defensive position running generally East and West, South of the Moder River, had been defended successfully against strong enemy attacks. The fact that these attacks failed, coupled with the Allied successes on other fronts, made it apparent that enemy troops were being withdrawn from our sector. As a result it was believed that the enemy had given up the offensive in our sector and would therefore be on the defensive. The attack in which the 112nd Infantry Regiment participated had the object of straightening out our line and also testing the enemy's strength and defenses as well as establishing a bridgehead across the Moder. This attack jumped off on the 1st of February with the primary object of seizing Oberhoffen with one battalion. The attack was initially successful, and two companies were in the town the next morning. However, these companies did not have any supporting armor with them as the bridge over the Moder River had not yet been completed. During the morning the enemy counter-attacked with infantry, supported by tanks, and succeeded in getting into the town and disorganizing our troops. During the time our ground observers, as well as the Air OP, expended some 1500 rounds on observed missions on tanks and infantry. Late in the afternoon the town was again attacked from the South by the 1st Battalion against stiff opposition. The attack was resumed the next morning, and by slow and steady progress succeeded in clearing out most of the town during the day. The next few days, although the town had been cleared, it was made almost untenable for our people by enemy self-propelled and tank fire from the woods - 300 to 400 yards to the Northeast.

At this time the continuation of the attack to the East of Oberhoffer was taken over by another unit and the 142nd Infantry given a sector including Kaltenhouse. This made it necessary for us to move West to be in better position to cover our regimental sector. Things quieted down again for a few days during which time our artillery fire was very much restricted by ammunition allocations. Observed targets were always available due to the aggressive enemy, and although we fired on most of the missions the proper fire for effect could not always be given. On the 11th February the enemy launched a battalion sized attack on Oberhoffer supported by at least two self-propelled guns. With the help of darkness and an early morning snow storm they succeeded in getting into the center of the town without much opposition. However, when daylight came and the snow storm stopped, the enemy's route into town was sealed off with artillery fire and our troops in town converged on the enemy from the North and South. By nightfall two hundred prisoners of war had been taken, including one battalion commander and two company commanders, and one of the self-propelled guns knocked out. The failure of this attack as well as the previous counter-attack apparently proved to the enemy that we were determined to hold Oberhoffer and no further attacks were launched against us; having established a bridgehead across the Moeller River we too went on the defensive. This situation continued with the center of activity on the front being around Oberhoffer where considerable self-propelled and tank fire was exchanged. Our ammunition allowance of approximately twelve rounds per gun, per day, allowed us to make only weak efforts to combat the enemy's self-propelled guns, mortars and automatic weapons which incessantly harassed the town.

On the 15th February the 142nd Infantry Regiment was relieved by the 143rd Infantry Regiment, and our mission then became one of general support. The third week of February was a rather quiet and inactive one for us because of the nature of our mission and the ammunition restrictions. However, we were comfortably situated, and showers and movies were available. Along about the end of the week the Division sector was changed to include more frontage to the West and to be relieved of all the sector including Oberhoffer to the East. The 142nd Regimental Combat Team was to relieve elements of the 101st Airborne Infantry Division in a sector East of Haguenau. On the 22nd February our battalion occupied positions. in the vicinity of Huttendorf. Our initial role in this position was general support of the 101st Airborne Infantry Division Artillery. However, in as much as this was an extremely inactive front we did little more than to register on a number of check points.

On the 26th February the 142nd Infantry came into the lines and we again took over the direct support. Two battalions of Infantry and the Anti-tank Company were put in the line and we had five observers in position with these units. Because the flat terrain and forest offered poor observation it was necessary for some of our observers to occupy positions in dugouts along with the front line Infantry. Although there were no major targets fired on — every day found us firing on small groups of infantry, mortars, and machine guns.

The month ended with the 142nd Regimental Combat Team in this inactive, defensive, position.

Prepared under the direction of the Battalion Commander.

CHARLES R. CRAWLEY

CHARLES R. CRAWLEY, ASH 20014573, Cpl, Battery "B", 132nd Field Artillery Battalion, missing in action since 1500 hours, Thursday 1 February 1945, in Oberhoffen, France, coordinates 09.2 - 20.6, France, 1:50,000 map, Sheet XXXVIII - II, Brumath, France.

Cpl. Charles R. Crawley was a member of the artillery forward observation party with 2nd Battalion, 142nd Infantry Regiment. This party was with "C" Company. "C" Company had occupied Oberhoffen in the morning and encountered only scattered infantry resistance. By noon this resistance grew into a counter-attack with infantry and tanks. These tanks were able to enter the town and a dart house to house fight ensued. During this phase the members of the F.O. party became scattered. Corporal Crawley and Pvt Dominic S. Mercadante were last seen in a section where a group of German infantry were rounding up American prisoners. 1st Lt. Gilpin who was in charge of the party is also missing.

It is believed that all three members of the party were taken prisoner.

Corporal Crawley is 24 years of age. Born 26 February 1921. He enlisted in the Service 20 September 1940.

Next of Kin: Mrs. Florence B. Blackshear, Route #2, Alvordado, Texas.

DONALD C. GILPIN, ASN 0-1177411, 1st Lt., Battery "C", 132d Field Artillery Battalion, missing in action since 1500 hours, Thursday, 1 February 1945, in Oberhoffen, France, coordinates 09.2 - 20.8, France, 1:50,000 map, Sheet XXXVIII - 114, Brumath, France.

1st Lt. Gilpin was artillery forward observer with "C" Company, 2nd Battalion, 128th Infantry. "C" Company had occupied Oberhoffen in the morning and encountered only scattered infantry resistance. By noon this resistance grew into a counterattack with infantry and tanks. These tanks were able to enter the town, and a brick house to house fight ensued. Lt. Gilpin was last seen entering a house during the fight by an Infantry Sergeant. Immediately after Lt. Gilpin two German infantrymen entered the same house. The American Sergeant crept up to the house and entered it. All he found was some American equipment stacked in a corner of a room. A further search was made later to find some traces of Lt. Gilpin, but nothing was found. It is believed that he was captured.

1st Lt. Gilpin was 29 years of age. Born 5 May 1916. He was commissioned 2nd Lt. 11 February 1943 and 1st Lt. 17 April 1944. Lt. Gilpin entered service from Ravenna, Ohio.

NORVIN F. RAGUE, ASN 0-170290, 1st Lt., Battery "C", 132nd Field Artillery Battalion, lightly wounded in action, 2150 hours, Friday 2 February 1945, East of Bischwiller, coordinates: 12° 3' - 18° 5', France 1150,000 map, sheet XXXVIII - 15, Drumath.

1st Lt. Raque was accompanying "D" Company, 452nd Infantry as an artillery observer for the 3rd Battalion on the night of 2 February 1945. The Infantry was crossing an open spot East of Bischwiller when enemy flares went up over them, and a machine gun opened up on them from the fringes of the woods further East. The recent thaws had made the going difficult. One of the men was not wearing his helmet and was partly submerged in water and in danger of sliding into deeper water due to his heavy equipment. Lt. Raque realizing the man's plight pulled him out of the precarious position and in doing so partly exposed himself. The machine gun opened up right then and there as well and this time fire caught Lt. Raque in the left thigh and hand. He was treated shortly afterwards and evacuated.

1st Lt. Raque is 25 years of age. Born 4 November 1919. He entered Service from Louisville, Kentucky; was commissioned 2nd Lt. 25 February 1943 and promoted to 1st Lt. 7 August 1943.

OPERATIONS IN FRANCE AND GERMANY

MARCH 1945

NARRATIVE

The beginning of the month found the 132nd Field Artillery Battalion in position in the vicinity of Battendorf in direct support of 112nd Infantry Regiment. The general situation was of a defensive nature with only patrol action by either side. The front was defined by the Moder River which ran Northwest and Southeast through Haguenau. The front was generally quiet all along our Army sector with the main action in the theater taking place farther North where the First, Third and Ninth Armies were attacking.

From the 6th to the 13th of March the battalion was out of the line and in a training area. It was quite a relief after over two hundred continuous combat days to be out of the lines away from the noise, danger, and tension of combat. Our training during this week consisted mainly of toning up in accuracy and military discipline. During this time one day was devoted to the calibration of the twelve howitzers. The calibration brought out the fact that several guns in the battalion consistently fired as much as two hundred yards short in average range than the rest of the guns. Corrections were made for these guns in subsequent firing with better results reported by the forward observers.

On the 13th March orders were received and plans made for our return to active combat. Positions were selected in the vicinity of Dauendorf - about fifteen hundred yards from the front lines. These positions were to be occupied in preparation for an attack in which our Division as well as other Divisions of the Seventh Army were to participate. On the night of the 14th these positions were occupied. Our mission was that of direct support of 112nd Infantry Regiment, and the mission of the Division was to breach the Siegfried Line which began some twenty miles North, and then to push East to the Rhine.
The attack along the Seventh Army front jumped off on the morning of the 15th with no artillery preparation in our particular sector. The initial resistance at the river crossing was quite strong, but lacked depth. After this crust had been penetrated resistance was spotty or nonexistent. However, the infantry and tanks were delayed by mines and demolitions abatis.

Early on the morning of 17th March the battalion displaced forward a distance of four miles, and alternate plans were made for rapid pursuit with the infantry riding on our artillery vehicles. However, these plans were not carried out due to demolitions and the battalion again displaced four miles later in the evening. In as much as there was little or no resistance very little firing was done by our battalion from those intermediate positions. On the noon of the 18th March we again moved forward a distance of fifteen miles to positions in the vicinity of Lobsmart where the batteries went into temporary positions. The Battalion Commander and Battery Commanders went forward another four miles to the vicinity of Drachenbronn, and the battalion brought up at 1900 hours. These positions were occupied in preparation for an attack on Wissembourg, where it was believed that the enemy would make a stand. However, with the exception of mines and demolitions only light resistance was encountered and the town was quickly cleared. The advance continued through the next day until our infantry ran into the outer defenses of the Siegfried Line - about five miles North of Wissembourg. At this time our battalion had moved to positions about two miles North of Wissembourg, and inside the German border. We were then in position three thousand yards from the first "Drachen's Teeth" and pill boxes of the Siegfried Line. As our infantry approached the Siegfried Line and prepared for an attack against its enemy opposition became much more intense. This included artillery and Nebelwerfer fire as well as machine guns and small arms. On the 20th the infantry began its attack on the line, but advances were made only through the hilly, densely wooded country on the left of our sector and here the going was very difficult. Our battalion did a lot of firing against machine guns, Nebelwerfers and artillery; but our light, or even the medium artillery, was ineffective against the enemy pill boxes. It was only the infantrymen with demolitions who could clear them out.

On the 21st and 22nd March the job of capturing the pill boxes continued with slow, but steady progress. In one instance one of our forward observers adjusting an 8 inch howitzer found it to be very effective and knocked out four pill boxes.
At the time this was taking place the armored units of General Patton's Third Army had broken through to the Rhine at a point 80 miles North of our front. From there they had pushed on to the South and by the 22nd March were reported to be only twenty miles North of our position. This threat to the enemy's rear plus the fact that our infantry had penetrated the line in some points made any further opposition in our sector impossible.

The night of the 22nd we were subjected to very heavy artillery and Nebelwerfer fire as the enemy withdrew. Our infantry was quick to follow the retreating enemy. With infantry riding on tanks spearheading the pursuit, our battalion with an infantry battalion on our vehicles followed after the retreating Germans from noon until the next morning - (24th March) when we went into position in the vicinity of Pulzheim about five thousand yards West of the Rhine. This rapid advance of twenty-five miles through the completely disorganized enemy found many small groups by-passed. The morning of the 24th found our batteries capturing small groups of from six to ten enemy soldiers. About seventy-five prisoners were taken by the battalion in two days.

Our occupation of the town of Pulzheim is an example of American versatility. We moved into the town early in the morning while the infantry was still clearing it. An occasional round of enemy artillery came in until about noon. The evening of the same day a picture show was given for the battalion in the auditorium of a hotel used as the Battalion Headquarters.

This completed our mission of breaking through the Siegfried Line and taking all of the ground up to the Rhine river. The only activity in the sector was policing up of small groups of enemy that failed to get over the river.

The battalion remained in this position until the 25th of March. During this period the only activity that was observed was a few individuals around pill boxes on the opposite side of the Rhine. There was little artillery firing done from either side during this period.

The last three days of the month the Division was withdrawn from the line and moved into an assembly area in the vicinity of Landau - sweating out our next mission.

CHARLES E. STELL

CHARLES E. STELL, ASH 35165033, Corporal, Battery "P", 132nd Field Artillery Battalion, killed in action, 0630 hours, Tuesday 20 March 1945, West of Ober-Otterbach, Germany, coordinates 16.6-52.5, Eastern France, 1,500,000 map, Sheet XXXIX-13, Wissembourg.

Corporal Stell and Pvt. Thomas W. Horton, ASH 2803446, were members of the artillery forward observer party with 2nd Battalion, 112nd Infantry. They were under the command of 1st Lt. Bernard K. Wilkie, ASH 0-1181193, and at the time were attached to Company "P". Company "P" was making an attack on enemy pill boxes in the mountains in the vicinity of Ober-Otterbach (Siegfried Line). After a terrific fire fight Company "P" was able to drive the enemy from two of his dug in lines of defense. Because of heavy barrage of machine gun, mortar and artillery fire Company "P" was forced to set up a defensive position and reorganize for their attack on the enemy pill boxes. During this time Corporal Stell and Private Horton bravely carried the artillery 610 radio and by this action were able to deliver defensive fire that prevented the enemy from forming for a counter attack. The following morning while Corporal Stell and Pvt Horton were in the process of operating their radio under an intense hail of machine gun fire in preparation for an attack, they were both shot through the head by enemy fire. They died instantly.
Corporal Stell was 25 years of age. Born 9 March 1920. He was inducted into service 8 October 1941.

OPERATIONS IN GERMANY
APRIL 1945

NARRATIVE

The activities of the 132nd Field Artillery Battalion for the month of April can be divided into two periods. The first of these, including the first twenty four days of the month, being a period in which the battalion aided the Division's support of the Allied Military Government in occupying a part of Germany and also carried on some training and preparation for future offensive operation. The second period consisted of the last week of the month during which time the Division joined the XXI Corps and participated in the pursuit of the fast crumbling German army.

During the occupational period the batteries were billeted in four small towns, some fifteen miles North of Kaiserslautern. Our mission consisted of supporting the military government in this zone. The battalion was assigned a large area, and this in turn was broken down to the batteries. The actual work consisted of policing up all explosives and military equipment in the area, screening the villages for enemy military personnel, and enforcing the ordinances and regulations prescribed by the military government. The performing of these tasks took the time of considerable men and trucks for the first week in as much as there was quite a lot of military equipment abandoned in the area. Large stores of equipment that could not be hauled away required guards. This combined with the guards on the highways to restrict civilian travel kept a large number of our personnel on continual guard duty. In regard to the handling of civilians, it was found a battalion civil affairs officer was necessary to coordinate the civilian control. By the middle of the month the policing job had been completed and the guard arranged so that two batteries performed all the duties while the other two were free for training. On the 19th of April the battalion was inspected by inspection teams from the Division Headquarters. The various teams inspected kitchens, billets, orderly rooms and records, trucks, howitzers and other ordnance equipment. Although there were some minor deficiencies the battalion made a good showing on the inspection.
On 23 April we received orders for movement East across the Rhine River, and a billeting party was sent forward. This time it was understood that we were to take a hundred mile motor move and to move into an assembly area. At 0745 on 24th the first aerial left. At 1600 the battalion closed into the town of Gaggenbach after a 160 mile move without incident. The entire 112nd Regimental Combat Team was billeted in the nearby towns. Twenty-five of our trucks were dispatched the next morning to help move up the remainder of the Division.

On the 26th of April the 3rd Battalion of the 112th Infantry and our battalion received a sudden mission to investigate a by-passed group of two hundred enemy soldiers who were located in the woods Southeast of Aachen. The trucks that we had sent out the day before returned in time for the battalion to pull out at 1600 following the 3rd Battalion. At 2300 hours we closed into town just North of Aachen and the batteries went into firing positions. The suspected enemy never materialized, however the mission that the Division would soon undertake was announced. This was the relief of the 69th Infantry Division which was to take place as soon as we could move in and take over. At this time the general situation on the XXI Corps front was fluid and resistance was sporadic. The general position of the troops at this time was somewhere immediately South of the Damme River and rapid progress to the South and Southeast was reported by all units in this sector.

On the 26th April the actual relief took place and at this time the line of farthest advance was along the Lohr River in the vicinity of Landshut. Here although there were no enemy troops in contact our troops were held up by blown bridges. One railroad bridge was captured intact and the 11th Armored Division, which was working in our sector, was given priority in the crossing. The next day a pontoon bridge had been constructed across the river and the 112nd Regimental Combat Team went across during the late afternoon and night of the 29th April. The order of march in this move was; Reconnaissance Troops cut in front, 2nd Battalion riding on Company "B", 753rd Tank Battalion, Regimental Headquarters Company, Company "B", 111th Engineers, the 3rd Battalion riding on Company "B", 322 T.D., and the 933rd Field Artillery Battalion (155mm M-1) then the 1st Battalion mounted on the 132nd Field Artillery Battalion vehicles, "A" Company, 111th Medical Detachment, "A" Company, 99th Chemical Mortar Battalion. This move was made into territory that had only just been overrun by the 12th Armored Division and there was danger of sniping from by passed enemy troops. This move became very unpleasant when it started to snow at about 2200 hours, however it cleared up at 0100 hours and afterwards it was not so bad. After fifty miles of night driving we arrived in an assembly area in the town of Felling, immediately South of Weilheim, at 0500. Here we rested for a few hours and fed out a hot breakfast while plans were being made for the march to the South and Southeast. At 0600 on the 30th April the orders were received to continue the motor movement in the same order as the previous night with the mission of moving South to the town of Murnau where the infantry was to form road blocks on two of the main roads leading to the Alps. At 0920 we were on the road again and arrived in Murnau at 1515. While we were in route six ME - 109's flew across the column, two of which zoomed low to straff, but they over shot their mark and no damage was done. This was the first time we had seen enemy planes during the daylight for many months. The road blocks were set up without incident and our Battalion billeted in the town of Murnau with the guns in a position of readiness.

To summarize the month of April, the first three weeks of non combat duty as occupational troops although it required a lot of work was a welcome relief after the many months of combat which we had been through. The latter part of the period found the battalion moving one hundred and fifty nine miles to rejoin the fight and then moving another one hundred and sixty miles in pursuit of an enemy which never materialized. No roads were fired by our battalion during the month and no casualties sustained. Hundreds of enemy prisoners were rounded up in the last few days. Much credit for the successful rapid pursuit goes to the drivers and motor maintenance personnel who were kept constantly busy.

OPERATIONS IN GERMANY AND AUSTRIA
MAY 1945

NARRATIVE

It may be recalled that during the month of April 1945 the Battalion had returned to the line in the vicinity of Landsberg, Germany, relieving the 63rd Division and had participated in the hasty pursuit of the fast crumbling German army. This pursuit carried the Battalion to Murnau in Southern Germany, which is near the Northern entrance to the Alps, and on the edge of what was thought to be the German army's redoubt. It was in this location that we opened the month of May. The mission of the 1/2nd Regimental Combat Team was to block two entrances to the Alps a few miles South of Murnau, and our guns were in a position of readiness to support these road blocks. However, there had been no enemy resistance for the past few days and none was encountered here. Many German soldiers were being picked up as they quit their disorganized flight into the mountains.

The Battalion received a short rest in the comfortable billets in Murnau while plans for further pursuit of the enemy were being drawn up. Four or five different plans were issued during the next three days. On the 4th of May these plans crystallized and the Battalion moved out at 0800 hours in the morning and traveled some fifty miles to the East and then twenty miles to the South closing in at 2100 hours in Kufstein, Austria. Along the way the convoy passed thousands of enemy soldiers on their way back to our Prisoner of War cages.

In Kufstein the Battalion went into firing position, but no firing was done. The forward Infantry elements, however, did run into some scattered resistance from die-hard SS Troops, but these were quickly overcome. On the 5th May at 1600 hours we again got march orders and with the 1st Battalion, 1/2nd Infantry Regiment, riding on our trucks moved thirty-five miles deeper into the Tyrolean Alps, into the town of Schlitters - some twenty-five miles Northeast of Innsbruck. At 2030 hours the same day the Battalion Commander read the following message to the Staff and the Battery Commanders assembled: "German surrender effective 051200 May 1945. All units will remain in place". This was a very welcome message to everyone. Even though we had not been doing any fighting lately it was a great relief to know that the job that we had worked on incessently for so long was at last about to be completed. Realization of the end of "blood, sweat and tears" in Europe did not come upon us suddenly. We had lived a pattern of definite uncertainty for so long that change would only come gradually.

The Battalion remained in the vicinity of Schlitters for the next three days while we gave the German army a chance to transmit the terms of surrender to all of their personnel. On the 8th of May the Battalion moved seventy miles to the Southeast into the heart of the Tyrolean Alps where the Regimental Combat Team was to occupy an area and enforce the terms of surrender and instructions given to the German army. The latter included the laying down and collecting of all arms and ammunition, and secondly the assembling of all army personnel at designated assembly points.

It was here in the beautiful setting of the Alps Mountains that we find the Battalion at the close of the European War. A war that had afforded us many strange sights and experiences through Africa, Italy, France, Germany and Austria.

There were no casualties during this period.

OPERATIONS IN GERMANY AND AUSTRIA

MAY 1945

NARRATIVE

The end of the war in Europe found the 132nd Field Artillery Battalion deep in the beautiful Tyrolean Alps of Austria. The fact that our actual combat days in this theater were over was of course a big relief to everyone. However, we soon found out that there was still a lot of work to be done. Our mission in the vicinity of Muhlbach, Austria, was to occupy a portion of the country and to enforce the terms of surrender on any enemy in our area. In general this consisted of collecting and guarding all arms, explosives, and equipment surrendered by the German army. Secondly, the soldiers themselves were to be assembled and kept together as units pending further disposition.

On the 12th of May the Division was assigned a new area and on the 13th of May our Battalion moved some two hundred miles to the Northwest. The Battalion CP was now in Erkheim some forty miles South of Ulm, and we were in rather flat, uninteresting farm country. Our mission in this area, which we expect to be in for some time, is that of occupation and support of the military government.

Initially the whole Battalion was billeted in two towns which were right close to each other. In as much as this was a farming community there were no large buildings to use as barracks, and it was necessary for the men to be quartered in private homes which had been requisitioned. Later on as we became more familiar with our area more suitable billets were found. It was our desire to find large buildings to house the personnel of each battery. In most cases this was accomplished very satisfactorily and the batteries set up barracks style billets, mess halls with tables and chairs and pleasant day rooms.

Our activities during the latter part of the month can be broken down into three categories, namely: Our duties in support of the Military Government, military training, athletics and recreation.

Our work in support of the Military Government consisted of screening all of the twenty-three towns and villages in the Battalion area, placing guards on important installations and stores, maintaining check posts on the highways and in general being responsible for law and order. Initially our check posts had quite a problem on their hands trying to enforce the travel restrictions laid down on the German civilians. Prior to our occupation of the area there had apparently been no one in the area to enforce the travel restrictions, and many refugees had taken advantage of this in violation of standing orders prohibiting their travel. At two of the posts it was necessary to keep a vehicle on hand most of the day for the purpose of hauling the violators into the Military Government Court at Memmingen. The civilians soon found that we meant business and later in the period this trouble was cleared up.

The maintenance of law and order was our second biggest problem, the root of which lay in the fact that there were eight hundred displaced persons in the area - the most of these being Poles and Russians. Many cases of alleged looting and pillaging were charged against these displaced persons by German civilians. Each case of this type required careful investigation, but in most of the cases the guilty party was not to be found. Most of these crimes were petty thefts of a few items of wearing apparel or food stuffs.

All of the guard and check posts duties were performed by two of the batteries leaving the other three free for training and recreation.

The military training was designed to attain and maintain a high standard of discipline, proper orientation, health and physical condition. A day's training consisted of calisthenics, disciplinary drill and instruction classes during the morning, and "I and R" activities and physical recreation in the afternoon. Each battery constructed it's own athletic field, soft ball diamond and volley ball court.

In summary the period was one of settling down to our present job as occupation troops. It has been our first opportunity to stay in any one place for over a week since leaving Italy, and in general it has been very pleasant to follow a garrison life. Although there are duties to perform in connection with the support of the Military Government there is some time left for military training and recreation. There were no reinforcements received for the month of May by this Battalion. During the month 62 men were sent home on the redeployment program, and many more individuals are anxiously awaiting their opportunity.

There were no casualties during this period.

OPERATIONS IN GERMANY

NARRATIVE

The beginning of the month of June found the Battalion still occupying the position in the Erkheim area, east of Memmingen, which it had taken over about the middle of May. The principal role, as before, was that of supporting the Military Government and conducting training and rehabilitation. The usual problems of handling civilians and displaced persons were still being encountered, however by this time most of the civilians were aware of having to carry passes and were apparently trying to abide by the regulations governing travel.

On 5 June all training was suspended in observance of the Normandy Invasion. Only the necessary guard and fatigue details were maintained and the day was devoted to athletic contests of various types. In addition to being a holiday, this was also the beginning of a period which was to see an almost complete turnover in the personnel of the Battalion. Lt Col Green, the Battalion Commander, left on this day to join the staff of General Alexander M. Patch, who was preparing to return to the United States. A small percentage of the Battalion had left prior to this time and the end of the month was to see all but a very few of those remaining, on their way.

A few days later the organization was ordered to occupy a new area by 14 June. This change was brought about by a relocation of the boundary between the Seventh and the Third Armies. This called for a move of only about ten miles from the present area. The new sector was immediately west of the Iller River, between Mooshausen on the south, Rot on the west and Dettingen on the north. The new position brought no noticeable change in the kind of terrain or the duties of the Battalion. Check posts were set up and guards were placed on vital installations in the area, the most important of which were three power plants along the river.
Towards the end of the month training was suspended due to redeployment of troops and checking of property by all organizations. Some difficulty was experienced in providing enough personnel for guard and check posts due to so many men being transferred to other units and various calls for extra details in connection with the same. Fewer problems were encountered in handling displaced persons in the new area, due to more experience in this line, and also to the fact that the Russian contingent was moved to an assembly camp as a step towards starting them back to the homeland.

Some difficulty was caused by the boundary between the American and the French zones dividing the Landkreis of Biberach. The burgemeisters of all towns in the battalion area had been accustomed to receiving their orders from Biberach which was now in the French zone and orders from the French Military Government were sent out from time to time to towns in the American zone. Due to the differences between the French and American policy quite a bit of confusion was caused by these orders, especially among the civilians in the American zone.

The end of the month found the last and largest contingent of the high point men ready and waiting for orders to leave. Only a very few of the older men were left in the organization, some being classed as essential due to MOS numbers and a few lacking only one or two points of being above the minimum critical score. Thus the month ended and so did the original 132nd Field Artillery Battalion, which was one of the first light artillery battalions to land on the beach at Salerno in the first invasion of the continent of Europe. Although the men who compiled the records and established the battalion's reputation have departed, replacements are being received and the task of training them to uphold the organization's position is under way.

There were 14 Officer and 168 Enlisted Men replacements received during the month of June 1945.

OPERATIONS IN GERMANY
JULY 1945

NARRATIVE

The beginning of the month of July 1945 found the Battalion still occupying positions in the Brittain Area, east of Hemmingen which the Battalion had taken over about the middle of May. Principal role as before was that of supporting the Military Government and rehabilitation. The usual problem of handling civilians and Displaced Persons was still encountered.

On the 5th Of July, received Operations Instructions No 217, Headquarters 36th Infantry Division, dated 4 July 1945, relieving this Battalion from this sector, and the sector this Battalion occupied was occupied by French troops. In turn this Battalion was to relieve units of the 100th Division. On 7 July 1945, this Battalion moved to the Grand Area relieving elements of the 325th Field Artillery Battalion, 100th Infantry Division. Headquarters, and Headquarters Battery, Batteries "A" and "B" were located in large buildings in Schwabisch, Gmund. Battery "C" in German Barracks in Leiching and Service Battery in Butlaken. These positions were taken to continue support of the Allied Military Government. Our primary mission is to guard the Displaced Persons Camp Number 7 in Gmund.

Due to redeployment of the personnel of this unit, our Battalion strength became so low that much difficulty was encountered in the accomplishment of our primary mission.

On 20 July 1945, a secret operation of screening all personnel and inspecting all houses and buildings was carried out as prescribed by headquarters 36th Infantry Division. Several collaborators were apprehended and some firearms and propaganda booklets were picked up.

On 26th July 1945, an investigation of a reported murder at Displaced Persons Camp Number 7 was conducted by Colonel Zimmerman, Captain Hintz, Captain Curtis and the Provost Marshal of the 21st Corps. Findings were that the person committed suicide by strangling herself, that no American soldiers were involved.

This Battalion is now commanded by Lieutenant Colonel JOHN S. ZEHLEN who took over command from Major LEWITT who was transferred to Division Artillery as 8-3. This is our third Battalion Commander in as many months.

There were 34 Officers and 51 Enlisted men received as replacements during the month of July 1945.

OPERATIONS IN GERMANY

AUGUST 1945

NARRATIVE

The beginning of the month of August found the battalion continuing its security mission and support of military government in the Schwabisch Gmund area. Headquarters, Battery "A" and "B" located in Gmund, "C" in Eschau, Service Battery in Matlingen.

On 6 August a battalion non-commissioned officer's candidate school was instituted by the 122d, located at Rennenhof (55126) under command of Captain Merle L. Carey. With an initial enrollment of 20 enlisted men, the school, operating on a rigid 8 hour per day schedule, developed some outstanding NCO material, resulting in promotions for a majority of the candidates. Generally, morale was high and the interest and cooperation of individuals enrolled excellent.

The night of Wednesday, 8 August, a serious disturbance at DP Camp # 7 resulted in the death of two Poles and injury to at least two more. At approximately 2200, the battalion duty officer received a call from the Sergeant of the Guard reporting a small riot within the camp. Guards were called to suppress the disorder and by the time the Battalion Commander, Exec Officer and S-3 arrived on the scene, one Pole was dead of stab wound inflicted by another DP and one was dead of gunshot wounds, inflicted by a guard after the Pole had fired two rounds at him with a pistol. A thorough investigation was conducted, evidence showing that the altercation resulted from an argument over a female DP at a dance in the camp. Armament confiscated included an Italian automatic rifle, a .32 caliber pistol and a .32 caliber revolver. The guard was absolved of blame for the shooting. Prior to the small riot, an American soldier had been seen going over a fence into the camp, and was fired on by a guard. A thorough search failed to produce the man, and while he was in no way involved in the shooting or stabbing, the incident resulted in an order to guards to shoot anyone who fails to halt when challenged.

AUGUST 1945

NARRATIVE

The big news story of Japan's surrender, following by a few days the dropping of the first atomic bomb on Hiroshima, highlighted the news of the month. The event was observed soberly, with most men concerning themselves with speculations on earlier return to the United States and civilian life. The battalion commander was host of a party for the enlisted men Saturday night, 18 August.

First service practice since VE day was conducted by the battalion on Tuesday, 21 August, at Hertford E. Loree range, near Munzingen, Germany. Battery "0", which was in the field the entire week, did the firing, and interesting shoot was conducted at the OP after German civilians had been escorted from the danger area. The firing battery performed in a superior manner, and conduct of fire by officers was generally very good.

Captain Carey's NCO school held a premature graduation exercise 25 August, in order to be prepared for the organization of a new and larger class, consisting of 30 men from each battalion in Division Artillery. This school opened Monday, 27 August, with several graduates of the original school assuming duties as assistant instructors. Excellent progress is reported at the close of the month.

During August, several minor disturbances between displaced persons and German civilians were reported, including a number of thefts. This necessitated increasing security guards and patrols, as well as more rigid guarding of DP Camp # 7, known as Bismarck Kaserne.

The battalion I & E program was expanded to include several new technical courses under direction of Captain Thomas E. Selby. Security demands, requiring the duty of a majority of our enlisted personnel, cut sharply into the educational program.
All remaining officers and enlisted men with more than 65 points left the battalion during the month, including Captain John R. Gabbert and Captain Willmotte S. Curtis, leaving very few native sons in the "Texas" Division.

In general, morale continued to be excellent. At the close of the month, 30 officers and 598 enlisted men were assigned, with 6 officers and approximately 110 enlisted men absent from the battalion.

OPERATIONS IN GERMANY

September 1945

NARRATIVE

The beginning of September found the Battalion getting set for a move of about forty-five miles north to occupy the kries, Kunzelsau. Battery "A" was already in Kunzelsau, having gone ahead the 27th of August to take over the security responsibilities relinquished by units of the 63rd Division. Headquarters, Headquarters Battery, and the Medical Detachment remained in Schwabisch Gmuend, "C" Battery in Eschbach, and Service Battery in Mutlangen. The remainder of the Battalion was scheduled to make the move to Kunzelsau on September 10.

The I & E program was going strong with eight classes under way and attendance good. The security responsibilities remained the same, consisting of motorized patrols and guarding the Bismarck Kaserne, a Displaced Persons camp. Rumors that the Division would soon be placed in category IV and ship home sometime within the next two or three months persisted, and added a bit of excitement to the daily routine.

The official signing of the Japanese surrender document and the announcement of Sunday, September 2, as VJ day came somewhat as an anticlimax after the earlier news of negotiations. The men were relieved to know the surrender was finally official, but were not inclined to indulge in any wild celebrating. The day passed with no one becoming unusually boisterous.

The next few days passed quietly while plans were made for the move to Kunzelsau and for the formal Division review to be held on September 9th in honor of "Salerno Day," anniversary of the day the 36th Division landed in Italy. On September 6th, a thorough search was made of all farm houses within a radius of 10 kilometers of the town of Welsheim ("Operation Edison"). The purpose of the search was to confiscate hidden electrical equipment, but none was found.

Operations in Germany - Narrative

2 October 1945

On "Salerno Day," September 9th, the Battalion sent men to participate in the festivities at Geisingen. Many men, however, remained at home to take over the security of other battalions in order that they might participate more fully in the anniversary celebrations.

The following day, the remainder of the Battalion made the march to Kunzelsau, with the exception of "C" Battery. "C" Battery followed the next day. The march was made by Battery and was completed in good order. Batteries "A", "B" and Headquarters were billeted in what was once an old castle, converted into a fairly modern military school. "C" and Service Batteries occupied another school building a few blocks away. The security mission consisted of patrols and guarding two Displaced Persons camps.

The next few days brought about several changes in the officer personnel. Lt. Colonel Zimmerman left the organization and his place as Battalion Commander was taken by Major Hunt from the 133rd. Captain Ax left for Fort Sill along with Lieutenants Andrews and Sheehaner.

On September 15, the much discussed rumor of "Category IV and Home" became a fact, the Division was officially placed in category IV. The next few days kept everyone except the very high point men and the average men in a state of nervous tension. The minimum number of points required to go home with the division were first announced as 45, then 49 and then 62. The final figure of 60 did not come out until several days later. Meanwhile, a large number of men with over 70 points and men over 38 years were shipped to units scheduled for early sailing. The transfer of these men left openings in the TO ratings allowed and many men were made happier by promotions they had long ago felt they had earned.

The remainder of the time spent in Kunzelsau found the Battalion busy turning in equipment. The shortage of men kept everyone busier than usual, and the training schedule and the I & E program suffered. Two different artillery battalions inspected our installations preparatory to relieving us when we returned to the Gmund area. The 350th Field Artillery Battalion, a colored outfit, officially took over the security of the area at 1000, September 21st. The move back to Gmund was made in an orderly manner and in good time in spite of the shortage of men. The battalion commander later complimented the men on the efficiency with which the move was made.
Operations in Germany - Narrative

2 October 1945

Back in Gauend, Headquarters and Service Batteries and the Medical occupied the area that had formerly been occupied by Headquarters Battery before the move to Kunzelsau. "A", "B", and "C" Batteries billeted in the buildings on the edge of town formerly occupied by the Division Artillery No. 1 school.

Very few men were available for security missions and these were sent out to help other units. A night patrol for the town of Gauend was started on September 26 consisting of five men driving about town all night. Responsibility for this patrol was shared with the 131st Field Artillery Battalion on alternate nights.

The remainder of the month was spent turning in equipment and in preparation for inspections by Division Artillery and Seventh Army. Six officers and forty enlisted men were transferred to the Delta Base Section on September 29th. This brought the Battalion down to practically a skeleton force. At the close of the month, the Battalion consisted of 13 officers and 119 men. Only three new high-point men had been received and approximately fifty men with fewer than 60 points were awaiting transfer.

OPERATIONS IN GERMANY

October 1945

NARRATIVE

At the beginning of October, the entire Battalion was located in Schwäbisch Gmünd. Headquarters, Headquarters and Service Batteries, and the Medical Detachment occupied a group of buildings on Farler Strasse and operated a joint mess. The three firing batteries occupied factory buildings on the edge of town and meshed together.

The Battalion had been drained of almost all men below 60 points, and all men over 70 points and over 38 years of age. Battalion strength consisted of 119 men and 13 officers with approximately 50 men yet to be shipped out. The Battalion was scheduled to leave the Gmünd area for a staging area on approximately 15 October, and begin loading on boats approximately 28 October. Full replacements were due to arrive before the 15th.

The security activities of the Battalion were necessarily limited by the few men available. They consisted of guarding the 7th Army Collecting Point in Gmünd, and conducting an all-night patrol of the streets of the town. Responsibility for this patrol was shared with the 131st Field Artillery Battalion, each battalion taking the patrol on alternate nights. Later, a second patrol was added to include the area around Gmünd. The 132d Battalion conducted this second patrol every night, while the 131st Battalion accepted full responsibility for the town patrol.

During the first two weeks of October, replacements arrived almost daily. The remaining low point men were shipped out; and by 14 October the turnover in men was practically completed. The Battalion was scheduled to be processed in Gmünd and by-pass the regular staging areas. Strength had increased from 119 EM and 13 officers to 341 EM and 41 officers. The administrative personnel had been readjusted to accommodate the experience and rank of the new officers and men, and the battalion had settled down to a daily schedule designed to train adequate drivers, improve the condition of motors, and accomplish the necessary requirements to prepare the unit for overseas movement.

On October 15th, the Battalion, in conjunction with the 131st Field Artillery Battalion, conducted a large-scale shake-down raid on the Bismarck Kaserne DP Camp. Each battalion supplied 144 men and 12 trucks. The men were divided into teams, each with an officer and an interpreter, and surrounded the camp at the appointed hour (0830). Each team had a prearranged area to search. Many items of U. S. Government property were found, principally clothing; also, ammunition and weapons were found and confiscated.

Also on the 15th, units of the 1st Armored Division, which had arrived in Gmund earlier in the month, began taking over the security responsibilities of the area. This battalion was relieved of the guard at the 7th Army Collecting Point on the 15th, and of the Road Patrol of the area surrounding Gmund, on the following day.

The new men of the Battalion were given a chance to show how they looked as soldiers on October 17th at a retreat parade by the combined troops of the 131st and 132d Battalions. The division Band was engaged for the occasion, and the troops were reviewed by Colonel Johnson, the new Division Artillery Commander. The day was cloudy but the rain held off. Even though it was the first formation of the Battalion as a unit, the men made a splendid appearance.

The next two days brought about some changes in patrols and guard. A daily Traffic Control Patrol was instituted for the purpose of cutting down traffic accidents and the misuse of government and civilian vehicles. The patrol made four trips a day and covered the roads around Gmund. An officer, a driver, an MTO interpreter and a civilian policeman made up the patrol. Several violations on the part of military and civilian personnel were handled before the patrol was taken over by Military Police of the 1st Armored Division on October 25th. Security responsibilities were increased by the addition of an Alert Guard of 26 men. This guard functioned in the nature of a riot squad and was subject to call 24 hours a day. On the 19th of October, the Battalion took over the guard of the Hardt Kaserne, the smaller DP Camp in Gmund.

On the 22nd of October, training was suspended while a Division FOM team checked the personnel records of every man in the Battalion. This operation took the entire day. Results of this inspection were considered very favorable; only a few minor discrepancies were found.
Wednesday, 23 October, the Alert Guard, furnished by "B" Battery on that date, was called out at approximately 1630 to the main DP Camp in the event of any trouble in an attempt to move some 700 DP's out of the Camp to Stuttgart. Actually, only about 50 DP's were moved, due to complications in rounding them up, and no trouble was experienced. The guard returned to its battery area at 1800.

The last week of the month brought a slight change in redeployment of the division. The readiness date was further advanced to the 15th of November and word was received that 60-64 point men would be transferred to other units not as far along in the redeployment schedule as the 36th Division; while men with 80 or more points would be sent to units scheduled to sail before the 36th. A few days later, it was announced that men would be shifted around within the Division to provide different ranges of point scores for different units. Artillery units would be in the 70-79 point classification, with Infantry units in the 65-69 category.

The close of October found the Battalion in about the same place in the redeployment schedule as the close of September. A large scale transfer of men was scheduled for the first days of November; new men would require processing; and the Division was scheduled to sail the latter part of the following month.
