

Professional Development Webinar Series

Surviving Bombardments Throughout Your Professional Life

Nancy Flournoy
Distinguished Curators Professor,
University of Missouri

Tuesday, October 2
12-1 pm EDT

FREE for members

'So many things have changed since I came of age, and so many things have remained the same – maybe veiled thinly, but persistent nonetheless. My generation had so many more opportunities than our mothers, particularly educational opportunities. Many men a generation or more senior to me were extremely kind and helpful. However, the idea that a woman would seek, much less hold, a position of responsibility was ludicrous to many, especially my peers. There are amazing opportunities to exercise your creative cognitive ability in our field, and you don't want to miss chances to seize opportunities that entice you. Staking out space to be creative may be challenging – but it is well worth the effort. I will tell some stories and try to leave you will some lessons, some cautions, and much encouragement.'

Registration:

<https://cwstat.org/activities/professional-development-webinar-series-surviving-bombardments-throughout-your-professional-life/>