Flight through Hurricane Irma

As people from the Leeward Islands to Ft. Lauderdale stocked up and battened down hoping to survive the most powerful hurricane ever recorded in the Atlantic, one Delta Airlines pilot decided to fly into the storm with a plane full of people.

Wednesday's Delta flight 431 from New York's JFK to San Juan Puerto Rico kept going - when others either turned back or stayed on the ground.

The plane wasn't full: according to Delta spokesman Michael R. Thomas, the plane - a regularly scheduled flight - was carrying about 30 passengers.

Hurricane Irma arrived at the island before the Boeing 737, but the pilot wasn't daunted.

He flew on.

And Twitter freaked out:

But wait... He wasn't done.

They decided to fly back out!

Mr. Thomas, the Delta spokesman, said the flight out had "a full load" - 180 people. Same cockpit crew.

They arrived at the gate in San Juan 7 minutes early, sat on the ground a mere 40 minutes - just long enough to refuel and get everybody on board - and then they barreled down the runway 24 minutes before scheduled takeoff.

Delta posted notice of the flight's accomplishment to its website: "Armed with the latest forecast from the airline's meteorology team, Delta operated its last scheduled flight to and from San Juan on Wednesday ahead of the storm," it said. "Flight 431 from New York-JFK arrived at 12:01 p.m. to nine miles of visibility and light rain. Winds were around 24 knots with gusts up to 31 knots - all well below operating limits for the 737-900ER to safely operate. Flight 302 then departed San Juan at 12:41 p.m., just 40 minutes after landing, with 173 customers on board.

"Our meteorology team is the best in the business," said Erik Snell, Vice President - Delta Operations and Customer Center. "They took a hard look at the weather data and the track of the storm and worked with the flight crew and dispatcher to agree it was safe to operate the flight. And our flight and ground crews were incredible in their effort to turn the aircraft quickly and safely so the flight could depart well before the hurricane threat."

"Delta's proprietary flight weather viewer app that pilots use to help predict turbulence was another tool used by crews to make the final San Juan flights as smooth as possible."

The last commercial airline flight out of San Juan Puerto Rico as Hurricane Irma came barreling over the island on Wednesday was a lot more exciting on Twitter than it was in the cockpit, according to family members of Captain Chuck Joyce, the lanky, square-jawed, 52-year-old Delta Airlines pilot who flew the plane.

Even though he's "kin" to the Wood Brothers racing family - one of the "grand old Nascar families" - who race #21 car, he's not the type to hot rod, the family says, he's more steady-as-she-goes. He's been a Delta Airlines pilot for 20 years, and for a decade before that, he flew KC-10 refueling tankers in the Air Force.

"He would probably say 'It's no big deal - we fly over thunderstorms all the time,'" said Billy Williams, Mr. Joyce's brother-in-law and an engineering professor at Mr. Joyce's alma mater, North Carolina State University.

It certainly looked like a big deal when it was happening. As the most powerful hurricane in Atlantic history rolled in over San Juan's Luis Muñoz Marín airport, flights from other airlines turned back or stayed on the ground, but the Delta flight from New York's JFK continued on, flying through the outer bands of the hurricane to land, unload its 30 passengers, pick up 173 more, refuel and get back out... while the getting was still relatively good.

"They definitely knew this was going to be tight," said Mr. Williams, who conferred with Mr. Joyce before calling the Post-Gazette. Mr. Joyce and his family are - understandably - wary of the media spotlight. Mr. Joyce's daughter communicated with the Post-Gazette via Twitter and direct messages.

"Chuck is married to my sister," explained Mr. Williams. "He's a consummate professional and would give all the credit to the team.

"Chuck was certainly talking to the whole team, with the meteorologists in Atlanta. They basically came to the decision it was going to be tight, but it was going to work."

He was in San Juan, having flown in the night before on a flight his wife was hoping would be cancelled. It wasn't, and Mr. Joyce and his crew were prepared to weather the storm in Puerto Rico if the flight from New York couldn't get in, but it did.

According to Delta, the flight from New York arrived "to nine miles of visibility and light rain. Winds were around 24 knots with gusts up to 31 knots - all well below operating limits for the 737-900ER to safely operate."

The New York cockpit crew took seats in the back of the plane. Mr. Joyce strapped himself in up in the cockpit and worked his way through the pre-flight checklist. Passengers ran through an empty airport to board, and the cabin crew got them in their seats and battened down in record time, passengers said later.

"I've never seen people get on so quickly, and once people were on, everyone so quiet," one passenger told NBC Channel 4 in New York.

The ground crew had the plane refueled and ready to head back out in a mere 40 minutes, according to Delta and Flight Tracker time logs.

Meanwhile, the outer band of the hurricane had passed over the airport, and a long narrow gap opened to the north — between the outer band and the core of the incoming hurricane. It was up through this gap in the weather that Mr. Joyce would fly the Boeing 737.

"If you're a believer in providence — and I am," said Mr. Williams, "it looks like that gap between the core and the outer band — it looks like a gifted path out."

It also looked like a hair-raising, narrow escape to many watching on Twitter. The response to the flight went viral. First reported in the Post-Gazette, the story has since appeared in papers ranging from The Washington Post to London's Daily Mail.

"Looking back, it's sort of surreal how everyone reacted," said Mr. Williams. "The Twitter addicts were watching it unfold in near-real time... It looks exciting, and I'm sure it was for the people that watched."

But in the cockpit, they were just following the plan, he said. And it wasn't foolhardy.

"They weren't going to risk 173 lives or the equipment if they didn't feel it was doable," he said. "Pilots are part of the decision, but when push comes to shove, the captain can say 'I'm not comfortable — This is not safe.'

"Chuck's from the military," he said. "If you met Chuck, he's a man of courage to do the thing that needs to get done, but he's not a hot dog." Neither is he a hero.

"He'll say 'I absolutely, categorically reject being looked at as a hero,'" Mr. Williams said. "He'd say, 'We had it covered. All the right people were working the plan. I had one part, and I did it.' 'Same as a flight on a clear day.'"

Mr. Joyce's wife waited until he'd landed safely in New York to start texting family that he was safely out of the hurricane's path.

Most of them didn't really understand what had happened until later.

"My mom sent me a text and I didn't have any idea of the significance," Mr. Joyce's daughter said. "She sent me the radar picture, and later my brother told me the flight had become a Twitter moment. I was at work and really busy, so it didn't hit until later."

When she texted her dad, he texted back: "Great team effort, especially DL meteorology. They nailed the forecast!"

So like him, his family said.

"He's brilliant and gentle and kind — extremely dry sense of humor — and the strongest sense of integrity of any human I know," his daughter said.

"He's a good man. He doesn't think of himself as a hero. He just loves to do his job."

PRAYER ROOM UPDATE

After

THANK YOU to Girl Scouts Addison Coughlin, Maddie Billings and Sophie McKinney for giving the College Park Church Prayer Room a big makeover as their Silver Project. The girls received The Girl Scout Silver Award for their accomplishments. It is the highest award a Girl Scout Cadette can earn.

The small room on the third floor has been transformed into a meditative spot. Pray below the wooden cross, post prayer requests on the board, or meditate in the light-filled room.

Here's a recap of their amazing work:

- Removed the existing carpet and installed laminate hardwood floors (with the help of parents and siblings)
- Sanded and painted the walls "Mindful Grey"
- Sanded and repainted the ceiling
- Patched and painted holes in molding
- Installed a large cross on the wall when you first come into the room
- Cleaned the windows and installed curtain rods and curtains
- Installed a cork board wall for people to post prayer requests
- Refurbished an existing pink bookshelf by sanding and painting it white
- Installed ceramic crosses on another wall
- Purchased succulants for each window
- Repurposed some existing furniture for a sitting area
- Asked a local artist to create a word art poster for the room and had it framed and hung
- Placed prayer bench(es) created by Bill Ingold from reclaimed wood from the chapel pews.

The room was dedicated during the morning worship service on September 10, 2017:

Lord God, who compels and calls us to pray, who meets us in prayer, we come together as your body the church, to dedicate this prayer room for your glory.

Come, Holy Spirit, and fill this room with your presence and power.

Come, Lord Jesus, and hear our prayer, hear the prayers of those who stop here, who lift up their hearts to you.

May all who come here find sanctuary in this place.

May they find comfort and solace for their souls.

May they know their prayers are heard and answered.

May their faith be strengthened, their love refreshed, their hope encouraged.

May the experience of prayer which they have in this place enable them to be disciples, that they might follow you in the way that leads to eternal life, and may their discipleship be a witness that invites others to new life in Christ.

We pray this together, Lord, as your children. Amen.

To make prayer requests: you may write it on a visitor card (available in each worship service) and place it in the offering plate or drop a note in the Prayer Box in the new Prayer Room.
