

Chloe Ouellette Bio:

Chloe Ouellette is horticultural science senior at the University of Florida College of Agricultural and Life Sciences with a focus on production. She is pursuing a minor in management and sales in agribusiness. Chloe's interest in produce began as a child when her mother would take her to farmer's markets to buy fresh vegetables for the family. Chloe believes fresh produce is the cornerstone of any healthy lifestyle and strives to bring awareness to its importance. She has been involved with the Environmental Horticulture Club at the university for two years. This year, she has the privilege of taking on the role of Vice President and running one of the largest student-run plant sales in the country, the club's annual poinsettia sale at which they market and sell approximately 5,000 plants per year. Following graduation in May 2020, Chloe hopes to work in the industry for a few years before seeking a graduate degree. When she is not studying or working with the club, Chloe enjoys collecting vinyl records, volunteering and practicing at my yoga studio, and traveling.
