ABOUT WORKING THEATER

Founded in 1985, Working Theater’s mission is to produce plays for, about and with working people (the wage and salaried workers of modest means working in factories, stores, offices, hospitals, classrooms, and other workplaces throughout America). We believe that theater should not be a privilege or a luxury, but a staple. We want working people who may not be able to afford commercial theater or who feel that it does not resonate with their lives and experience to make play-going a regular part of their cultural activities. Toward that goal, we offer stories that reflect a diverse population of the working majority, acknowledging their complexity and often-denied power in an increasingly complex world. By creating theater of interest to working people and by bringing this constituency to our productions, we aim to change the composition of New York’s theater audience to reflect a full range of socio-economic diversity. In a nation that is frequently divided by cultural and class distinctions and where economic disparity continues to widen, Working Theater is committed to making theater that can bridge those divisions, expanding the reach of theater’s impact to all people, uniting us in our common humanity.

For the past two seasons the Company has been immersed in a multi-year community-based theater project, the Five Boroughs/One City Initiative, in which five teams of commissioned writers and directors collaborate with working people in each of the five boroughs of New York City to devise, script, rehearse and premiere an original play firmly rooted in the cultural identity of each neighborhood.

Working Theater has commissioned and produced more than 60 world premieres of culturally diverse new plays. The company has garnered widespread recognition and critical acclaim for its writing, acting and directing, and pioneering efforts in audience development. The Company has had over 30 original plays published, (three featured and fully reprinted in American Theater Magazine), six Drama Desk nominations, three Audelco Awards and a Drama Desk Award for Outstanding Ensemble for Tabletop.

Our 32nd Season ran from September 2016 to June 2017 and featured the development, workshopping, and production of new plays specifically aimed at reaching our audience of working men and women. We continued our Five Boroughs/One City Initiative, working with over 145 theater artists and serving over 2000 audience members across the 5 boroughs of New York City.
LETTER FROM THE PRODUCING ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

At its core, theater is a conversation between an audience and a play. Working Theater’s Five Boroughs/One City Initiative grew out of and is designed around that concept. The project aims to inspire dialogue between communities throughout this vast and varied city of New York, a conversation about the issues that are facing all of us, fulfilling the Company’s mission to bridge the divide of culture and class through theater. In light of the deep divisions facing America at this moment in our history, I am proud to be part of Working Theater’s efforts to address those divisions. I hope that all of you, Working Theater’s family of artists, audiences, board members and supporters, feel proud as well.

2016/17 was packed with community events, performances, workshops and conversations. It began back in November when we took part in a collaborative presentation of The Every 28 Hours Plays with New Group and Labyrinth Theater. Please check out www.every28hoursplays.org for more on this inspiring national theater project, a collection of 72 one-minute plays, that shines a bright light on racial inequities in policing and society in this country. In December we took a deep dive in the development of Alternating Currents, producing a workshop of the play by Adam Kraar and directed by Tamilla Woodard. Alternating Currents explores the extraordinary community spirit of Electchester, a housing development created in the late 1940’s by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers as affordable housing for its members. In early March we had the pleasure of watching the final performance of our TheaterWorks! class at 32BJ SEIU. The members of this union -- building service workers -- are all passionate about the program and really good writers and performers, so it’s always a great evening!

The main event of the season was the production and borough-wide tour of Bamboo in Bushwick. The play explores the rapidly gentrifying neighborhood of Bushwick through the lens of several long-term residents of the neighborhood reacting to the changes in a variety of ways. This narrative is juxtaposed with a surreal exploration of gentrification inspired by the psychedelic murals that cover many walls in Bushwick. These scenes portray a more direct vision of gentrification and the resulting displacement of individuals based on an historical/demographic interpretation of the trend. This juxtaposing dramaturgical structure made the play an ideal vehicle to inspire a deep, non-confrontational conversation about the real effects of gentrification and displacement on neighborhoods and communities of color.

In the lead up to the production the Company, under the leadership of community engagement coordinator Chelsea Gregory, held a number of community events in Bushwick. These included art-making workshops, community dialogues, a “community shine” event and a reading of the play engineered for community feedback. All activities centered around a conversation about gentrification and how outside groups and newer residents could support local efforts to halt the worst aspects of the trend. In addition to local artists we worked closely with many local community groups engaged in the gentrification struggle, including Ridgewood Bushwick Senior Citizens Council, Make the Road/NY and El Puente.
Bamboo in Bushwick opened in its home community on April 13th at the Ridgewood Bushwick Youth Center. It then moved on to a 2 ½ week off-Broadway run before touring our venue partners in Queens, the Bronx and finally Staten Island. Each and every performance was followed by a guided conversation on gentrification inspired by the play. Hundreds of New Yorkers took part in these conversations. This is from Manhattan audience member Arturo Diaz, who is a Bushwick native and wrote for a blog on the TDF website: “At the end of the show, the entire audience and the actors had a conversation about communities like Bushwick. I, of course, had to say something about my community and how gentrification is affecting it in a negative way. It honestly felt good just speaking about it and getting to hear the opinion of others, but also hearing how my community is not the only one that’s going through this. Bamboo In Bushwick made me extremely proud of where I come from.”

And this reaction from an online review: “Cardona Jr., in a completely inspired stroke of the pen, creates another play-world based upon a real art-washed mural in Bushwick. The brilliance of this move lies in both the safety of discussing painful realities in fantasy settings, but also in using a gentrifier’s mural as a subversive jumping off point. The point of great theater is to strike at our feelings and leave us wondering why. Bamboo in Bushwick definitely leads that conversation” -Victoria Santos.

We ended our season with a standing room only final performance of our TheaterWorks! class with the retirees of Local 1180, Communication Workers of America and the next night a home-coming of sorts, a reading of Rob Ackerman’s Dropping Gumballs on Luke Wilson, which the playwright describes as a “spiritual sequel” to Working Theater’s hit, Tabletop. Both of these nights were exceptional and capped a truly inspiring season of theater and community dialogue.

As always I am extremely grateful to Working Theater’s Board of Directors for enthusiastically embracing the Five Boroughs/One City project. I am equally grateful to all the artists involved, my partner and the Artistic Director of the project, the insanely talented Tamilla Woodard and our extraordinary venue partners for taking the leap with us. But none of this work could happen without the support of YOU: our sponsors, contributors, audience members and volunteers. Thank you for partnering with us in creating theater for and about working people and presenting it in communities where working people live. I look forward to sharing our plays about Queens, Manhattan and Staten Island and the community conversations at the core of each play with you in subsequent seasons!

- Mark Plesent, Producing Artistic Director
THE EVERY 28 HOURS PLAYS

Monday, November 7, 2016 at the Bank Street Theater, New York, NY

Every 28 hours a Black person is the victim of systemic violence in America. In collaboration with the Oregon Shakespeare Festival and the One-Minute Play Festival, 72 contributing artists from across the country created one-minute plays in response to this widely shared and contested statistic. Working Theater collaborated with the New Group and Labyrinth Theater Company to present staged readings of a selection of these plays that honor the ongoing work of the Black Lives Matter movement.

The evening featured plays by Dominique Morisseau, David Henry Hwang, Lynn Nottage and many others performed by a company of volunteer directors and actors.

Participating Directors:
Christopher Burris, Kareem Fahmy, Rebecca Martinez, Candido Tirado, Kat Yen

Participating Actors:

Performances were followed by a discussion of issues raised by the plays and how art/activism can impact the local and national conversation around Black Lives Matter. Talkbacks were led by Chelsea Gregory (Working Theater) and Sarita Covington (Artists Co-Creating Real Equity) with members of People’s Justice, October 22nd Coalition, and The People’s Institute.

FIVE BOROUGHS CONTINUED PLAY DEVELOPMENT

In 2016/17 Working Theater continued development and community outreach for the remaining plays in the Five Boroughs/One City Initiative, with the aim to produce and tour the boroughs of NYC with each in a future season.

This season included further development of the Brooklyn play, Bamboo in Bushwick by Ed Cardona, Jr., directed by Ana Margineanu; the Staten Island play, Breaking Bread by Chisa Hutchinson, directed by Kristin Horton, and a workshop and public reading of the Queens play, Alternating Currents by Adam Kraar, directed by Tamilla Woodard.

When two newly married electricians move to Electchester everything seems perfect: spacious apartment, low rent, friendly neighbors, and an incredibly close-knit community. But as they settle in, they discover how much they may need to give up in order to really belong.
COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT

In partnership with our community partners Ridgewood Bushwick Senior Citizens Council in Brooklyn, Community Action for Safe Apartments (CASA) in the Bronx, and other community service organizations across the boroughs, Working Theater engaged communities in workshops, readings and full productions. In addition to the touring production of Ed Cardona, Jr.’s Bamboo in Bushwick we presented:

“The Art of Solidarity/El Arte de la Solidaridad”
Nov. 3, 2017 at MayDay Space, Bushwick, Brooklyn
A participatory evening of dialogue with housing rights organizers, artists and Bushwick community members using education-style sharing, circle process and artistic work, exploring the role of the arts in gentrifying neighborhoods.

“Artistic Responses to Gentrification”
Feb. 8, 2017 at Make the Road, Bushwick, Brooklyn
A performance and activism workshop in collaboration with Make the Road’s Youth Power Project

“Bronx Voices: Empowering Community in the Face of Rezoning”

BAMBOO IN BUSHWICK PRODUCTION PHOTOS BY MICHAEL BLASE
Bushwick was called home by locals long before any magazine called it hip. Bamboo in Bushwick explores gentrification in this suddenly trendy neighborhood from divergent angles. As a group of old friends gather for a round of dominoes, outside forces converge on their street corner. In an alternate reality, inspired by the psychedelic murals that have taken over many walls in the neighborhood, a turf war breaks out on the icy tundra. Is there room in Brooklyn for both penguins and polar bears?... When your community is threatened, every block is worth fighting for.

Bamboo in Bushwick is part of Working Theater’s Five Boroughs/One City Initiative. The play was developed in partnership with Ridgewood Bushwick Senior Citizens Council (RBSCC), and through conversations with their members and members of Bushwick Salvation Army Community Center, El Puente Bushwick, Make the Road New York and the general Bushwick community. The production was presented in English and Spanish with super-titles in both languages.

Bamboo in Bushwick was made possible with an award from the National Endowment for the Arts, funds from the New York State Council on the Arts with the support of Governor Andrew Cuomo and the New York State Legislature, public funds from the New York City Department of Cultural Affairs in partnership with the City Council, the Howard Gilman Foundation, the Shelley and Donald Rubin Foundation, the Shubert Foundation, and the One World Fund. Performances of Bamboo in Bushwick in Queens were generously supported by a grant from City Council Member Rory Lancman, facilitated through New York City’s Department of Cultural Affairs.

Special thanks to our venue partners and hosts: Angela Battaglia, Brigette Blood, Robert Santos & the staff at Ridgewood Bushwick Senior Citizens Council & Ridgewood Bushwick Youth Center; Christopher Erikson, Michael Yee, Joseph Docetti & everyone at IBEW Local 3; Jack Doyle, Vivian Vazquez, Susanna Blankley & everyone at New Settlement Community Campus; CASA and Larry Anderson & the whole crew at Snug Harbor Cultural Center and Botanical Gardens.

And thank you to all of the Bushwick Residents who shared their stories.
