

CONCENTO

March 2, 2020

Vol. 15, Issue 7

Overture

Greetings, Musicophiles!

This will be a rather brief Concento. It seems that most of us are busy doing what we do best. Throughout the month I generally prepare by ruminating on a subject that interests me for this column, but this month I have decided to write briefly on patience. Patience for ourselves and for our students. My editorial ruminations never happened this month because the Coronavirus took most of my attention since I have a son living and traveling overseas. Things I usually do were left undone as there were many phone calls and strategy discussions about his returning to the United States. Practising that I normally accomplish never happened. Along with many other things.

I occasionally hear from my students that they were too busy to practice. If I could arch only one eyebrow I would do that, most of the time. But, really, we all get pressured and sometimes may need a sick day/week/month to recover. I'm not telling you how to run your studios, just saying that we should be patient with our students and with ourselves, too.

Music is the space between the notes.
