

See Something Good in the Sack: Hotel Beds With the Nicest Views

Kristine Hansen
December 15, 2014

*You can enjoy this view without getting out of your bed.
(Photo: The Singular)*

Sometimes the best view you'll see on vacation is from your hotel room bed. Whether the window frames fjords at the ends of the earth in Patagonia, the Eiffel Tower in glitzy Paris, or the lush hills in Cusco, Peru, this is a definite perk. There also are plenty of domestic birds-eye views from hotel beds, including Central Park in New York City and the Bay Bridge in San Francisco. This winter, consider cozing up in one of these sweet pads for a panoramic scene that'll be as memorable as anything else you'll see on your trip.

The Singular

You'll feel like you're sleeping out on the pier. (Photo: The Singular)

What: The Singular

Where: Puerto Natales, Chilean Patagonia

The View: Patagonian Fjords and Last Hope Sound

Only a wall of picture windows separates your industrial-chic room (after all, this is a former sheep-processing plant) from the famed fjords. All 54 rooms (plus three suites) are on either the first, second or third floors, which puts you at an intimate distance. To get closer, you need only walk outside and down the pier. But why would you do that when there is a comfy armchair right by the window?

From: $370/night