Greetings!

Although Governor John Bel Edwards considers the front-loading of TOPS to be a "continuation of the tricks and gimmicks" of the Jindal administration, he announced late last week he will not veto the measure. So what exactly does this mean for students who will be receiving the TOPS award in September?

Under the plan passed by the Louisiana Legislature this summer, students receiving TOPS will have to pick up 30% of their tuition costs this year, but they will pick up a larger percentage of it in the spring.

This fall, students will only pay 5% of their tuition, but in January, they will be asked to cover 51%. This plan was created with the hope that the state would discover new revenue this fall that could be put toward TOPS later in the year, something Edwards considers unlikely.

"While I had a plan that would have fully funded TOPS for the entire academic year, the legislature did not raise enough revenue or identify enough spending cuts to fully fund the program."  For more on the TOPS cuts click here.

During a presentation to the Louisiana Board of Regents, Governor John Bel Edwards requested the state's colleges not raise tuition this fall since higher education received roughly the same amount of state funding as last year. He did caution, however, that schools should be prepared for mid-year cuts.  NOLA.com, 06.30.16

Students attending LSU in Baton Rouge will see slightly less than a 5% increase in tuition this year, which comes to $242 a semester. LSU President King Alexander told students, "The flagship's adjustment is less than half of the amount permitted under the law for this year and well below what we have exercised in previous years."  NOLA.com, 07.05.16

- According to a report published by the American Council of Trustees and Alumni, only 23 of the 76 colleges named among the best by US News & World Report, require history majors to take U.S. History. In their report, the ACTA said they see the absence of these requirements as a "truly breathtaking abandonment of intellectual standards and professional judgment."  Wall Street Journal, 07.01.16
