NWSEO secures National Coverage of the Vacancy Crisis in the National Weather Service

(May 5, 2014) Watch the NBC Today Show tomorrow morning for a report on the large number of vacancies in Emergency Essential positions in the National Weather Service. NWSEO's work with an investigative reporter at the NBC affiliate in Dallas, Scott Friedman, led to a story that captured interest from the producers of the Today Show.

If you live in the Dallas viewing area, you can catch the segment on NBC 5 in Dallas tonight. The related story, with a national focus, airs on the NBC Today Show tomorrow morning, May 6. The story will be a live report from in front of the NWS Storm Prediction Center.

Many thanks to all of our members and stewards who participated in this effort. This has been an incredible team effort involving hundreds of NWSEO members who've kept us informed about the vacancies in their offices, members who quickly responded to verification requests last week, and those who participated in interviews, on and off camera. Your work shows the strength of our organization. We can accomplish great things when we work together.

NWSEO has requested news links to both of the stories and hopes to have them to post on www.nwseo.org soon.
