Rackstraw Talks From County Jail

By Eric Brett

Rackstraw was interviewed from his cell in the Stockton County Jail. He spoke about his escape from the sheriff's jail in 1971, where he was held for six months, and his subsequent efforts to evade capture.

When asked about his escape, Rackstraw admitted to using a homemade bomb and a stolen car to flee the jail. He claimed he was able to elude police for several days, but eventually was caught and returned to prison.

In his interview, Rackstraw also spoke about his experiences in prison, including solitary confinement and the difficulties of finding work. He expressed a desire to continue his career as a bank robber, despite the risks involved.

Despite his past crimes, Rackstraw maintains that he is a capable and skilled criminal who has always been able to outmaneuver the police. He insists that his actions have been justified, and that he will continue to pursue his goals until he is finally able to escape from the confines of prison.
