OF WASHINGTON DC

BROWN BAG TALK

JAPAN'S AGRI-FOOD SECTOR & THE TPP

with John Dyck,
Agricultural Economist,
Economic Research Service,
United States Department of Agriculture

Thursday, September 26, 2013
12:00 – 1:00 P.M.

Japan-America Society of Washington DC
1819 L Street, NW, B2
Washington, DC 20036

John Dyck will talk to JASW members and friends about how Japan and the United States are linked via food and agriculture, and how this relationship affects the future of the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP). Japan and the US are connected by agriculture in more ways than most people realize. How does joining the TPP benefit both countries in the agricultural market? Mr. Dyck will discuss this in his presentation followed by Q&A.

John Dyck is an agricultural economist with USDA's Economic Research Service. He has studied the food and agriculture markets and agricultural trade of Northeast and Southeast Asia since 1979. He has a special interest in policies concerning agriculture and agricultural trade, and has written numerous reports and articles about changes in Japanese, Korean, and Southeast Asian policies and markets. Mr. Dyck has traveled often to farm areas and cities in Japan and the rest of East Asia, and has observed differences over time and across countries. He was educated at Harvard, Penn State, and Cornell.

The program is free, but seating is limited.
