Dear Friends Of Happy Trails,

Spring is here, and we are looking at a whirlwind of activity for Happy Trails this coming year. In the midst of all the animal rescue that we handle, we are busy planning special events and activities to celebrate our big 10 year anniversary this year — we hope you’ll write some of the dates on your calendar and plan to join us!

Happy Trails handled quite a few animal cruelty cases this winter, and we took in amazing numbers of animals and provided them with medical care, warm shelter, proper nutrition and lots of TLC, all thanks to your generosity and support. For some of these guys whose court cases are over or who have been signed over to the sanctuary, it’s time now to find them kind, caring and compassionate homes.

April is going to be “Adopt-A-Farm Animal” month, and we will be sending out special fliers by email so that folks can help us spread the word about various animals who are available for adoption. If you can help us pass along these fliers, please sign up to receive electronic emails through our website at www.happytrailsfarm.org — the power of networking is incredible when it comes to helping us find homes for these gentle and trusting creatures.

Our newsletters are becoming quite popular, and with each edition, we are going through more and more copies. The expense ads up quickly. We would like to keep our newsletters available to everyone. Even if you’re not in a position to donate to the care of the rescued animals, maybe you would consider sending in $2 or $3 to help us offset the cost of our newsletters if you enjoy reading them.

I truly appreciate the support of each and every person who makes our animal rescue work and educational efforts possible! Many, many thanks!

Two Questions

1) Do you like reading the Happy Trails newsletters? If you said yes...

2) ...do you have $2 or $3 to spare?

The cost of printing our newsletters certainly ads up, and the demand for the newsletters is increasing. Even if you are not in a position to donate to the care of the rescued animals, but you do enjoy reading our newsletters, maybe you would drop two or three dollars in an envelope to help us cover the cost of printing our newsletters. We would greatly appreciate it — every little bit helps!

Make sure to keep up with all the latest Happy Trails stories and happenings on our website at www.happytrailsfarm.org

The thinking person must oppose all cruel customs no matter how deeply rooted in tradition and surrounded by a halo. When we have a choice, we must avoid bringing torment and injury into the life of another.

In December 2009, Happy Trails received a strange call from a business in Poland, Ohio. A stray black goat had shown up in the area surrounding a strip mall, and decided that it would make its home next to the building of a wholesale pharmacy.

The employees began to leave the little guy food, and cautioned each other to drive slower through the parking lot to avoid hitting their new resident.

Though he was happy for the food, the small, black goat did not trust people. The good folks who worked at the business were concerned for his safety and well-being. He had no shelter from the freezing rains or the heavy, wet flakes of snow. There was no dry area where he could lay down.

Could Happy Trails please help them safely catch the homeless goat?

Rounding up stray farm animals that aren’t crazy about people is always a fun time...not. I’m certain that we picked the coldest day of the year to hitch up the trailer. Cheri Rider, Rob Willard, and myself, arrived in Poland and drove past a heavily populated shopping area.

Where in heaven’s name did a stray goat come from in this neck of the woods?

A more detailed version of the story of Stinky George can be found on our website at www.happytrailsfarm.org. Here George hangs out in his favorite cat cage...we can’t really explain this either....

We hopped out of the nice warm truck and into the frigid arctic winds that were blowing stinging, icy snowflakes into our faces. I had been playfully whining during the entire ride about the cold and the crappy weather.

Cheri and Rob surveyed the scene. Where should we start to look for the goat? Behind the building there appeared to be acres upon acres of woods. Surely we would never find this thing. They were talking about splitting up and searching various areas of the vast wooded area. This did not sound the least bit enjoyable to me, as I pulled my stocking hat completely down over my frozen nose. As they contemplated a plan, I danced around trying to get rid of the chill and trying to see through the holes in the knit pattern in my hat. Tears from the searing cold were filling my eyes.

An icy blast hit us hard and I continued to dramatically moan and groan, and in my pretend misery, I walked over to the corner of the building that was right in front of us. Rob and Cheri continued to debate about venturing into the vast open area behind the building. Surely in this corner of the building smack next to me there would be less wind and virtually no area to really have to search. I jokingly blurted out, “Uh, I’ll pick this area to search.” With that said, I boldly set foot into their very nicely manicured beds of shrubbery next to the building.

Whoosh! Fast as lightening,

“Happy Trails does not take in domestic animals such as dogs, cats or rabbits...” goes the saying on our answering machine.

Well, try telling 35 bunnies that when you’re on the scene of a cruelty call, and they’re looking out at our from their pathetic little cages which held no bedding and no water, and were sitting out in the middle of a yard in a snowstorm.

Portage County Humane Officer, Jennifer Sanderson, and I visited a location in Portage County which revealed a small three-sided shelter that had caved in and lay in a pile of rubbish on the frozen ground. In addition to the 35 rabbits, there was a small calf and a nearly 30 year old pony.

The pony stood before us with a big rope hanging from her neck that had been dragged through the freezing muck. Heavy ice balls hung from the ends of the rope. “That makes it easier to catch her,” we were told. The same heavy ice balls hung from the fur around her back ankles.

“She’s pregnant,” the owner announced. I immediately hoped to God he was wrong. She was underweight and in pretty sad shape. As we watched, she drug her heavy ice-encrusted rope around her neck wherever she went. “How do you know she’s pregnant?” I inquired. “I got a stallion and brought him here,” was the reply. I looked around but didn’t see any other horses. At least not yet.

We waded through a swampy, icy little gully and walked around the back of another shack-like building. With the way the fencing was set up, we had to completely walk around the entire structure to get to the open front. “Here’s where the pony can get into if she wants to,” we were told. I walk into the small area littered with snow-covered debris and looked straight up at the bright-blue late-afternoon sky. There was no roof.

Jen was in front of me as we walked toward the second half of the open structure. Suddenly she stopped abruptly and I heard her gasp. I turned to see an absolutely horrified look on her face. “Dear God, what is that?” The owner stood back and casually said, “Oh, that was the stallion. He died about three days ago.” I stepped around the corner of the open doorway to see a full-sized, emaciated, frozen, dead horse lying across a pile of junk up against the wall of the

Years ago, when I learned of the tremendous amount of neglect and cruelty done to animals, farm animals in particular, I had two dreams. One was that I wanted to take in animals and provide them a home where they could truly be happy. That dream came true when I bought a home with a large 1 ½ acre lot and a beautiful barn, and I adopted several goats that I fell in love with from Happy Trails.

On Friday, February 5th, in the middle of a snowstorm, there was a fire, and every flame bursting out of the barn was a flame to that dream. The goats were out of the barn and more than anything I was thankful for that. But the snow was coming down hard and they were soaked and at risk of getting sick. On top of that, all their hay was being burned with the barn. And they were scared. I knew of nobody nearby that would help me to get them warm and fed, especially in such bad weather...

The other dream I had was to be part of an organization that cared about not only the animals generally accepted as pets, but all animals no matter what use common society deems them to have. What I never dreamed of was the amount of dedication, compassion, and true friendship I would find at this organization: Happy Trails Farm Animal Sanctuary.

When I called Sharon Barnard, Rob Willard, and Annette and Russ Fisher the night of the fire, the first thing they all said was “How can I help?” I explained the situation and in the middle of a snowstorm predicted to accumulate over a foot of snow in one night, they drove forty miles on dangerous roads to bring hay, straw, blankets, and hugs. We moved the goats to another shelter on my property, patted them dry with towels, provided them hay, and gave them comfort. By the end of the night, the fire department had saved most of the barn and the goats were safe, warm and happy.

All throughout the next day, I received an outpouring of phone calls and emails from people at Happy Trails, some people whom I had never met before, offering compassion and help in whatever form they could provide. Not only do these people share my passion for helping animals, but also deep down, we genuinely care for each other. It brought me to tears because I had never experienced such a sense of family in my life.

When I come to Happy Trails, I see the animals being cared for. I see the joy the other volunteers take in spending time with the animals, in working to make their lives better, in joking with each other, and I think there is something very “right” going on with the people here. When I experienced what I did the weekend of the fire, It reinforced that thought with titanium alloy. I think anyone who volunteers at Happy Trails and truly grasps the spirit that surrounds it, comes to realize that this is the spirit in which we belong and that we are connected in this spirit no matter who or what species you are.

Many Thanks!

On Friday, January 22, 2010, Happy Trails picked up a 19 year old Quarter horse by the name of Buddy from a property in Bellville (Richland County), Ohio. The Ohio SPCA and the county humane officer requested Happy Trails assistance in this particular case.

Buddy had been underweight for quite some time, and back in December, his sheath began to hang down and became swollen, a very delicate and painful situation for a gelding. This is a condition that we have seen often enough at Happy Trails. If a gelding is suffering from malnutrition, he often does not have the strength or muscle-tone needed to retract. Gravity takes over, swelling takes place, and because the penis is then unprotected, it can develop a hematoma, become infected, or can swell to an excruciating size.

In Buddy’s case, it had been a very long time since he was able to retract. In the middle of single-digit temperatures, his penis had been exposed to the elements. It became swollen and painful. The humane officer involved in the case required that a veterinarian be called in to examine the horse. The vet (this was verified) suggested that the owner apply DMSO to the already painful appendage. This was definitely not a good call, as DMSO is something that needs to be used with extreme caution, and is not normally applied to sensitive areas such as this. The owner followed these instructions, and Buddy’s sheath, which had already become swollen to the size of a bowling ball, now broke out in large, open, burning sores. The family could not afford further treatment, and agreed with the humane officer to surrender the horse to Happy Trails.

Happy Trails picked up Buddy that Friday and headed immediately to OSU in Columbus. He arrived there within an hour and a half of being picked up. During the vet exam they discovered that he had a large portion of scar tissue covering the front of his penis. Buddy was in sad shape — he was severely underweight, he had an eye that he could not see out of that had started to recede back into his head, he was arthritic, and his genitals hurt.

The vet suggested a penile amputation. We normally do not put older horses through major surgeries and didn’t have a gut feeling that this was the route to go. He already had enough to deal with, considering that he suffered from malnutrition and was blind in one eye, so we asked if there was anything else that

Help eliminate animal abuse in Ohio
Way back when, when Happy Trails was just a blip on the radar screen, we organized a rescue of nine horses from the Mt. Hope auction to help bring awareness of all the horses that are sold weekly to the meat buyers. Happy Trails was pretty new. We had few contacts and very little connections.

Somehow or other, we found ourselves introduced by phone to animal rescue worker, Sarah Aitken, who offered to set up our horse trailers and haulers for this rescue. Little did we know, we would meet some folks who would become our friends for life and permanent volunteers with Happy Trails.

Phyllis and Jake Leonhardt were some of Sarah’s friends who arrived at Mt. Hope to help us haul horses to safety on that day of new beginnings back in 2002. It was the beginning of a second chance at life for nine lucky horses, the beginning of a growth spurt for Happy Trails that never ended, and the beginning of new-found friendships all the way around.

Though they planned only to help haul horses, Phyllis and Jake found themselves agreeing to foster an old Standardbred gelding, who they named Mr. Bill.

Mr. Bill was ancient — over 30 years old according to his tattoo registration records. But he was full of life and love, and he brought both of these things into the Leonhardt family.

Mr. Bill loved to go on rides throughout the calm and peaceful woods surrounding his new home. He was quiet and safe, and even the smallest of grandkids could ride him. He enjoyed the attention of his new family, and somehow or other he blended into their herd of Morgans.

Whenever we connected with Phyllis and Jake, we would always carefully inquire as to how Mr. Bill was doing. We would always receive the same response of, “He’s doing great!”

In the big picture of the story of Mr. Bill, my theory once again seems to hold true. I have a theory that we aren’t really here to rescue the animals, but rather they are here to rescue us, to teach us lessons and to bring meaning to our lives.

We truly didn’t rescue Mr. Bill from the meat buyers hands on that fateful day. His presence at the auction and the fact that he ended up on our rescue trailers was no accident. He ended up exactly where he was supposed to be — with a family where he was able to bring a incredible joy and happiness into their lives. He brought people together and helped us form lasting friendships, and he meant a great deal to many people.

On February 18, at nearly 40 years old, Mr. Bill’s earthly body finally ran out of enough energy to keep him going, an he was no longer able to stand up on his own. Phyllis and Jake make the tough decision to help him cross the Rainbow Bridge.

Mr. Bill will be sadly missed, though the pleasant memories will rise above the sadness, and we will all remember him for how he enriched our lives in so many ways.

Before I leave you with this final thought, let me make it perfectly clear that people who love Morgan horses absolutely swear by their beloved breed. And I kid you not, I have heard this come from both Phyllis and Jake... “Mr. Bill was thee best horse we’ve ever had!”
Feathered friends such as chickens, ducks and geese make excellent family farm pets! And right now, there are plenty of them in need of adoptive homes!

We REALLY need kind and caring homes for roosters — sadly this is one type of animal that is often abandoned. We have several families of geese who will be kept together in a group, and there are multiple pairs of ducks who would like to be adopted as couples so they can keep their mates. There are even several guinea fowl seeking a home.

All feathered friends are required to have a predator-safe environment and appropriate fencing. Ducks and geese require access to water, even if it’s a kiddie pool!

Feathered animals are some of the most educational and entertaining creatures ever! The chickens are fun to watch when they sunbathe and take dirt baths, and the ducks and geese splash around like crazy when they have their kiddie pools filled with clean water!

To adopt some feathered friends, call Cheri at 330-301-1552.

Bess And Jess — A Rather Bizarre Story Indeed!

(This is the short version — check out the longer story on-line at www.happytrailsfarm.org.)

Two Belgian draft horses recently came in through our Amish Horse Retirement Program.

Bess, the 17 year old mother, had major trauma giving birth, and her owner was retiring because she could no longer be used as a brood mare. He did not want to send her through the sale, and cared very much about her health and her future. Bess is already trained to drive and ride, and she also worked plowing the field. Her family would ride her bareback just to give her exercise while she took some time off while she was pregnant. She is healthy and sound other than not being able to breed, and we wouldn’t adopt her into a breeding program anyway. Bess is available for adoption and is a simply fantastic horse, and would be great for some light trail work! She gets along excellent with other horses and is gentle with people. Her adoption fee is $450.

Jess, her yearling baby, was born a hermaphrodite — a baby who had both boy and girl “parts”. A visit to OSU resulted in laparoscopic surgery to remove his testicles from his abdomen. He has recovered very nicely, and other than having his plumbing physically located a bit differently than most, the vets now consider him a gelding. He is normal in every other way, and is growing up to be quite the handsome and energetic young man, just like any other year old draft baby! Jess is now available for adoption, and is growing like a weed! He deserves a family who will love him and accept him as he is. What is “normal” to us, is not quite “normal” to him. His adoption fee is $150.

Both horses have been wormed, had their Coggins test, hooves trimmed, were thoroughly vet checked, and Bess had her teeth floated.

Jess’ surgery at OSU and related expenses cost Happy Trails $1,350. The vet’s explained that leaving the testicles in the abdomen could result in tumors and unsafe stallion-like behavior as Jess grew up. It was the equivalent of a geld surgery, but more complicated because of his parts being in different areas than was normal. We felt strongly, however, about giving this young horse a chance to have a good quality of life. Some people may want to view him as a freak of nature. I believe Jess is here with us to help teach people that not all of us are exactly alike, and that we need to learn to accept each other for our differences. Just like we are hoping that someone will accept Jess into their family for simply being who he is. And just like some people — his body may not be quite like the other horses, but his spirit is the same and he just wants to be treated with kindness and respect. It seems so little to ask.

If you can help out with the vet expenses for Jess, you kind tax-deductible donation can be marked “Jess” and sent to: Happy Trails, 5623 New Milford Road, Ravenna, Ohio 44266. We truly appreciate your support — your donations are the only thing that makes our animal rescue and rehabilitation work possible!

Seeking The Support Of Our Ohio Community

Please read the letter below, and if you know of any person or business that might be interested in helping us out with the funding for this necessary piece of equipment, please copy the letter and pass it along! We appreciate your help!

Dear Friend Of Happy Trails,

We LOVE serving the residents and the animals of Ohio, and providing our rescue and rehab services and our educational and outreach programs at no cost. Happy Trails operates on all private donations.

As so often happens, things break at inconvenient times, and the old skid steer that has served us well for many years has finally reached a point beyond where it is reasonable to sink any more money into repairs. A check-up revealed that repairs would cost half as much as the machine itself is worth — not a smart investment on the part of Happy Trails.

We were faced with the reality that we cannot function, attend to animal care, or operate the sanctuary without a skidsteer to handle our daily chores of cleaning out horse stalls, moving big round bales of hay, delivering straw to the various animal shelters, toting massive water tanks to the horse paddocks out back, or moving supplies to the appropriate barns.

We secured a loan to purchase a newer (but still not brand new) skid steer. We are turning to the businesses in our Ohio community to request your help with this unexpected expense. We would greatly appreciate your consideration of sponsoring a tax-deductible donation of one month’s payment toward the purchase of this piece of necessary equipment for Happy Trails.

Our monthly payment is $290.75. Your donation of one month’s payment will help Happy Trails continue to provide excellent care and rehabilitation services for rescued animals like Mac and Natasha! Mac is a Clydesdale draft horse that arrived at Happy Trails 700 lbs. underweight. Natasha, the goat, was found abandoned on the side of the road when she was only a day and a half old, and she fit into the palm of our hand. She is now one of Happy Trail’s rescued animals that visits the elderly residents of Northeast Ohio’s nursing homes.

Not every animal abuse case that we deal with becomes a high-profile media story, but each precious animal in every single abuse, neglect or abandonment case deserves a chance to recover and to experience a safe, healthy, and comfortable life.

With one month’s payment toward the purchase of the skidsteer, your donation will help us to:
- clean out 12 horse stalls every other day for a month; strip out the old bedding in the pot belly and farm pig shelters four times; haul three 800 lb. round bales of hay to the horse paddocks out back; take 24 bales of straw bedding to the feathered friends, goats and sheep barn; move heavy load after load of blankets and sleeping bags to the piggy blanket storage area; distribute about 30 bags of grain weekly to the various shelter areas at the sanctuary, and assist with the hundreds of other tasks that the skidsteer accomplishes for us daily.

Thank you very much for considering our request!

On behalf of Mac, Natasha and all the rescued animals at Happy Trails, we truly appreciate your support.

With kindness and compassion for all animals,

Annette Fisher, Executive Director

Tax-deductible donations toward the skid steer payments can be sent to: Happy Trails, 5623 New Milford Road, Ravenna, Ohio 44266.
35 Bunnies...

structure. His hip bones and ribs all clearly stuck out. It was one of those sights you will never forget.

We walked with the owner back up to the front of the property where 35 bunnies, many in open-air cages, sat in misery. There was no bedding and no signs of water.

The decision was made to remove all the animals from this property.

Happy Trails rescue workers went into action and made a place at the sanctuary to welcome the pregnant pony and the hungry calf. Normally we do not take in bunnies. The answering machine’s message continued to play over and over in the back of my head, “Happy Trails does not take in domestic animals such as dogs, cats or rabbits…” That night the Happy Trails rescue workers also made comfortable emergency arrangements for 35 bunnies.

Dr. Randy Alger gave a thorough check-up to the pony and the calf. Both were very underweight.

Sadly, he confirmed that the pony was at least four months pregnant. To make matters worse, he determined that she was at least in her mid-twenties. So, we now had an old, pregnant, underweight pony.

The bunnies...well, there was lots of bunnies. The kind folks at Barberton Vet Clinic helped us get everyone spayed and neutered at a discount, six rabbits at a time.

All the animals were signed over to Happy Trails, and we can now adopt them to caring, loving homes. Through networking, I am sure that we will find the perfect homes for the animals from this rescue!

The old pony, with the help of the vets at OSU, was assisted with losing the baby. If she was to carry it to term in her condition and at her age, she would probably not have made it through the birth. She has recovered and is in need of a home.

If you have a love for cows, maybe the adorable little calf that we named Gallagher would be just the perfect addition to your farm pet family! He enjoys attention, getting hugs and smooches, and is the perfect animal to educate people on the incredible personality of cows!

As for the bunnies...

- Many thanks to the Cleveland APL for helping us out by taking in seven bunnies to start with. Those guys are now all adopted, and they’re planning on taking in even more!
- Many thanks to the Portage APL for their donation that paid to have eight of the bunnies spayed and neutered!
- Many thanks to everyone who helped sponsor the spay/neuter costs of the bunnies!

Many of the bunnies are currently in foster care, and are in need of permanent and loving indoor homes — no more sitting alone outside in wire cages or dumped in someone’s cold, drafty barn! There are plenty of both boys and girls to pick from, all of them spayed or neutered. We have beautiful black and white or brown and white bunnies who have incredible markings. We have gray and white bunnies who look very proper and distinguished! We have solid white bunnies who will go with any home decor! Then there are tan bunnies and bunnies that are mixed shades of brown. Some are laid back, some are energetic, some are simply mellow, and some are very curious and inquisitive. Choose a bunny that fits your personality!

Bunnies need space for plenty of exercise and environmental stimulation. Bunny behavior experts will be available to talk to you about proper care of bunnies and to go over their special needs. You may have questions like, how do I litter-train my bunny, or how often do I need to trim its nails? We have folks who can help you out with these types of questions!

out from behind the bush directly in front of me ran the goat! “There he goes,” I yelled excitedly. “That was the goat!” Rob and Cheri took off in chase full speed. They distanced us and hit the woods at around the other side of the building. We all met up in a back parking lot, where the goat had easily distanced us and hit the woods at full speed. Phooey.

“That was brilliant,” Rob said dryly. “You just scared the goat away.”

“I was just joking around! How was I to know that the goat was in there?” I couldn’t believe what had just happened!

We would have never chosen that corner of the building to look for the goat on purpose — it was one of those freak accident things. Though we did a quick search of the wooded area near our trailer before giving up completely, it was pretty obvious that the goat was not going to come back any time soon just to humor us.

SECOND ATTEMPT

On Monday, February 8th, our second goat rescue attempt was successful! Almost too easy.

We had just experienced a major snowstorm in the last several days, and the snow was in massive snow drifts around the building. This time we pulled the truck around to the back of the building. As soon as we walked across the parking lot, we could easily smell an un-neutered male goat. Yuck!

If you have never smelled that before, it is quite a unique and offensive smell.

As we walked closer, the smell got increasingly stronger.

We had unloaded a role of fencing from the truck to help coral the goat. A path had been shoveled through the nicely manicured landscaping so that the goat could reach the safety and comfort of the area where someone had constructed a small wooden lean-to for him. A helpful employee offered the goat grain to keep him occupied. “Did you guys name the goat?” I asked. “One of the workers here named him George,” came the reply. Under my breath I whispered, Stinky George.

Rob had crept quietly down the short path and squatted down under some tree limbs. George was sure that something not good was about to happen. We could see George eyeballing the quickest way out of Dodge. I slowly waded through thigh-high snow to help block the opening. Finally, I too came face-to-face with George. “Lord have mercy does he smell!” I wanted to hold my nose shut. George surveyed the situation. He looked at Rob, then back at me. He looked at Rob, then back at me. I moved very slowly toward him with arms outstretched. I had a strong desire to spray perfume on the goat. Good grief was he ever stinky.

Then George made his move. Life a professional line backer he faked left, then right, then dove straight forward toward Rob and tried to run between Rob and the tree. Rob dove sideways, and the goat slipped through his arms. But wait! He had caught a leg! Rob’s glasses were all askew and he was holding on to the stinky goat’s leg for all he was worth.

I hurried over and put my arms around the goat’s head and shoulders and mistakenly claimed, “I got him - you can let go!” Rob let go, and with a strong jerk, stinky George knocked me over sideways and we both fell into another massive snow drift. I didn’t let go however — there was no way I was letting go and having to attempt to catch this goat a third time. This was it, and I held on for dear life.

But dear God the smell! And now it was right in my face!

After Rob was convinced that me and the goat weren’t going anywhere, he headed to the parking lot to bring the truck around!

So there I lay in the snow, holding onto stinky George, afraid to move. Though Rob wasn’t gone long, it seemed like forever. He finally pulled up in the truck. “Take your time,” I told him sarcastically.

Finally the ripe-smelling animal was safely in the trailer, good-byes were exchanged with the worried folks at the business, and we were off. But the damage had been done.

I took my gloves off, smelled them, and threw them on the floor. Yee gads. We were freezing, and the heater in the truck started to warm things up. “Oh this is nasty — roll down your window!” The open window brought us more of George’s wafting fragrance up from the back of the trailer. “Quick, roll ‘em back up! Roll ‘em’ back up!” It was a no-win situation.

George arrived safely at Happy Trails, thanks to the kind-hearted folks who offered him food and shelter during the most bitter weeks of winter. They had hearts filled with compassion, even if George was just a stinky homeless goat.

If you would like to help out with George’s vet bill and daily care, tax-deductible donations can be made in George’s name and sent to:

could be done other than consider surgery or euthanasia.

“You could try daily massage therapy,” came the vet’s reply.

Seriously? If the massage therapy worked and we could get the swelling to go down, he would be able to retract. The chances weren’t great, but it was an alternative to a painful and very expensive operation.

In the case of malnutrition, often with a proper refeeding program, a dropped penis will eventually recover and retract if the situation wasn’t too far along. This was definitely not going to be the case for Buddy. His condition had been going on for such a long time that it was currently at a crucial point where the swelling was not subsiding quickly enough on its own, and permanent damage was an immediate concern. The staff at OSU fashioned a “sling” of sorts from a dog muzzle to help hold the penis up toward his body to help keep it from freezing. Since this all was happening on a Friday, the good folks at OSU agreed to keep Buddy at the hospital over the weekend to observe him and see what type of therapy he could tolerate. This would give us a few days to figure out what to do with Buddy!

This was a unique problem for us — just when we thought we’d seen and heard it all, we now had to find a cooperative foster home that would be willing to deal with daily massage therapy for a horse that needed a rather painful and delicate area massaged. If the massage therapy worked and the swelling was eliminated, Buddy would then be able to retract, be much more comfortable, and have a good quality of life. I knew for sure we could help him gain the weight he needed and help him move past his aches and pains of the past. Some joint supplements and a long over-due hoof trim would help him to be more comfortable, and proper nutrition would go a long way to help him feel better. But where in the world would we find a foster home willing to massage the horse’s genitals several times a day to break up the scar tissue and to promote healthy blood flow to speed up healing?

As miracles often come out of the blue for Happy Trails, a truly wonderful, caring foster home appeared for the sad and miserable horse. The couple (who will remain nameless to protect their foster home status) even took the time to drive down to Columbus to OSU to meet with the vet on Monday, January 25th, to make sure that they would do everything properly for him and to learn about his condition.

I have to say that our foster homes are truly like gold — and many of them are absolutely priceless! This foster family is one such example. Our animal rescue work would not be remotely possible if it weren’t for the caring, compassionate people who assist us with rehab and recovery of these neglected animals.

And it also wouldn’t be possible without the generous donations we receive which help pay for our impressive veterinary expenses.

Buddy’s total vet bill at OSU came to $488.17.

That didn’t include our gas to haul him to the hospital and then to his foster home, or the expense of his daily grain, hay, dewormers and hoof trims.

If you are able to help with Buddy’s care and expenses, tax-deductible donations can be sent to:

It’s sometimes tough to write about delicate matters such as what Buddy is experiencing, but it is a very real medical issue which can cause an incredible amount of pain and suffering for the animal involved.

On behalf of Buddy, we thank you for helping us to cover his medical expenses — this way we will be able to help the next horse that comes through our rescue program in need of kindness, compassion and vet care!
