FMX becomes Diamond Sponsor with the NSPMA

The National School Plant Management Association (NSPMA) has the charter of promoting excellence in education through professional facility management. Today, NSPMA, along with FMX, a leader in K-12 facilities and maintenance management solutions, announced a new partnership designed to further the NSPMA mission by illustrating the best practices adopted by districts to improve their facilities and maintenance operations.

“We see school plant managers as the first line of defense in addressing many of the most pressing issues affecting districts today,” explains Marc Stitt, Chief Marketing Officer at FMX. “Historically, plant managers focused on the comfort and productivity of building occupants, but today they face new challenges such as making buildings more efficient, ensuring the health and safety of faculty and staff, and serving needs in their communities.”

The partnership between the NSPMA and FMX seeks to deliver best practices and inspiring new opportunities to help school plant managers address their facilities, maintenance, and operational challenges. “As the fastest-growing provider of facilities and maintenance management solutions for K-12 education organizations, FMX is the ideal partner to further the mission of the NSPMA,” concludes Dr. John Bailey, CEO of the NSPMA.
