

Premont School District (B)¹

After eliminating the sports program, Premont focused on academics. The emphasis on academics resulted from stopping the sports program, and starting a unique partnership with Texas A&M University-Kingsville. In May 2013, Chancellor John Sharp announced that Texas A&M University-Kingsville would partner with Premont to "provide support, training, mentorship and opportunities to the students, teachers and administrators." The academic program revolved around improving the self-efficacy and capacity of teachers through two-day training sessions, which occurred every six weeks. In the training, one day focused on curriculum and the other on instructional strategies.

The district is currently implementing a variety of programs, which is intended to increase student achievement and to increase student success rates. The district also provides professional development programs for teachers. The district also provides support for students who are struggling in school. The district also provides support for students who are struggling in school.
