Getting Ready for Serious Organization!

interACT welcomes Laurie Iria as full-time Executive Assistant to our Executive Director. She joins us from the Boston area and has been a great support to the whole team. We’re so glad to have her on board!

interACT has always been a small and efficient team. An all-remote workforce makes our administrative overhead budget significantly smaller than most organizations’. With Laurie on board, our operations and logistics will be streamlined like never before. This change will allow our other staff more capacity for critical mission-focused work.

2018 Staff
This year we said farewell to our beloved Youth Coordinator Emily Quinn, who has decided to pursue other opportunities after three years on staff. Emily jump-started interACT Youth and made huge strides for intersex awareness through her work in the media, including on MTV’s Faking It, where interACT consulted on TV’s first intersex main character. Emily remains an active Youth member, though she will be missed on staff! She’s already off to big and bright things, ending her 2018 by educating on the TED stage.

Thank you, Emily, for your dedication to interACT. We’re so excited to see what you have in store for 2019. xoxy interACT brought on three new full-time staff in 2018, two of whom are interACT Youth members. Hans Lindahl and Amanda Saenz joined staff as part-time Youth Coordinators in January, moving up to distinct full-time positions in May.

Hans serves as interACT’s Communications & Outreach Director, which includes a focus on youth program integration in communications. They have been an interACT Youth member for over three years, during which time they worked in web development, communications, and event operations. Hans has spoken on intersex issues at universities, medical conferences, and numerous queer comic arts festivals.

Amanda serves as interACT’s Youth Program Manager. They have been an interACT Youth member for over four years, and their credits include starring as the first intersex person to play an intersex role on television, via MTV’s Faking It. Amanda is a recent graduate of the University of Washington, with interests in gender studies and philosophy.

Message from the Executive Director

Being born with healthy bodily differences should not put children at risk of harm. But it does. Every. Single. Day. Doctors are operating on healthy infants and children in an attempt to erase their intersex traits, and with the support of a growing number of individuals and organizations interACT is working tirelessly to end these human rights abuses.

Supporters helped make 2018 one of interACT’s most powerful years yet. We released a comprehensive #4intersex education toolkit, co-authored a groundbreaking hospital policy guide, hired new staff to support communications and intersex youth programming, consulted on or authored over 75 pieces of media with hundreds of thousands of impressions, and passed the first ever legislation supporting intersex bodily autonomy in the United States: California’s SCR-110.

The lifelong physical and emotional impact of intersex surgery performed without informed consent is devastating and completely avoidable. interACT is on the front lines fighting to change laws and medical policies to protect intersex children’s bodily autonomy and is working hard to raise awareness to put an end to this abuse. I am so proud of interACT staff, Youth members, and board members and grateful to all of our donors and allies who lift up our work and get us closer our goal.

XOXY,

SCR-110 Is On The Books
SCR-110, our resolution affirming the bodily autonomy of intersex youth, became an official resolution of the State of California in August 2018 and is the first successful legislation in U.S. history to explicitly name the harms of non-consensual cosmetic medical interventions on intersex people. Legislators voting in support of SCR-110 recognized the human rights of intersex people and added their voices to the chorus of those asking for delay of any procedure that is not medically necessary until an intersex person can provide their own informed consent.

interACT co-sponsored SCR-110 with California State Senator Scott Wiener (D-SF) and Equality California. Many prominent human rights, children’s rights, and LGBTQIA+ organizations also supported the cause, including Lambda Legal, Human Rights Watch, PFLAG, The ACLU, The Trevor Project, The Children’s Advocacy Institute, AIS-DSD, NCLR, GLMA, and others.

Staff, board, youth members, and allies took numerous trips to Sacramento, meeting 1:1 with dozens of lawmakers and attending four different committee hearings before a final decision was made. SCR-110 sends a critical message, and we are tremendously proud of everyone involved.

A Guiding Light for Intersex Medical Care interACT was on the front lines of medical education in 2018. With our partners Lambda Legal and Proskauer Rose LLP, we created the first ever Intersex-Affirming Hospital Policy Guide. The guide was born from interviews with top medical allies and intersex individuals, centering their experiences throughout every page. The guide is a blueprint for institutions to provide sensitive, affirming care to intersex people.

interACT distributed the guide to hospitals nationwide in late 2018 and is seeking an institution to commit to being a first adopter. The guide is already being used in advocacy efforts in three major institutions with DSD clinics.

This year we congratulate Law & Policy Director Alesdair Ittelson for being named a top LGBTQ attorney under 40 by the National LGBT Bar Association.
interACT earned over 85 pieces of media coverage in 2018, many due to the efforts of interACT Youth members. This was our biggest year ever for visibility, thanks to partnerships with top LGBTQIA+ media and education organizations like OUT, them., and GLSEN.

In June, Hanne Gaby Odiele spoke on intersex rights at the Teen Vogue Summit, a gathering of thousands of the country’s top and upcoming youth social justice advocates.

Partnerships with outlets like MIC, NBC, and them. resulted in high-quality video content telling a range of intersex stories.

interACT launched the #4Intersex campaign in spring of 2018 with the goal of increasing ally education and involvement. The website, 4intersex.org, offers a complete toolkit with documents such as “Ally Do’s and Don'ts” and a language sensitivity guide.

The campaign kicked off with a “friendraiser” event in New York City attended by Hanne and queer organizing group Voices4.

Resources from the toolkit have been shared over 4,500 times on social media, reaching over 500,000 people.
In fall 2018, the New York Times announced a leaked Trump Administration HHS memo proposing narrow, inaccurate definitions of sex and gender that would erase intersex, transgender, and gender nonconforming people. interACT released a statement on behalf of the intersex community denouncing the memo in solidarity with transgender and gender nonconforming peer organizations. Our statement was shared on social media by thousands, including transgender activist Laverne Cox.

interACT’s editorial denouncing the memo, in partnership with Trans Lifeline and the National Center for Transgender Equality, was published by The Advocate. Youth member Alicia Weigel penned a New York Times op-ed. interACT communications staff worked with other top media outlets to ensure intersex representation in the national discussion.

"Intersex people have historically been erased by unnecessary shame, stigma and non-consensual medical intervention. Increasingly we’re speaking out and fighting back, and today louder than ever and in solidarity with our trans and gender non-conforming peers.”

—Kimberly Zieselman, Executive Director

Intersex Awareness Day

2018’s Intersex Awareness Day was a media blitz. interACT staff, board, and youth wrote or were featured in over 14 major stories from outlets including NBC, the BBC, and Reuters.

Staff and Youth members headed to New York City for the big day, October 26th. Youth member Johnny and Youth member and Program Manager Amanda coordinated a takeover of OUT Magazine’s Instagram, spreading intersex education in the center of Times Square.

Youth members marched through the rain in support of a protest by the Intersex Justice Project and queer advocacy group Voices4. Over 100 people, including several names in LGBTQ+ media advocacy, marched on Weill Cornell to denounce Dix Poppas, a leading practitioner and advocate of cosmetic clitoral reduction surgery on minors. He, like so many other physicians, continues to ignore the call from every intersex-led organization in the world to defer surgery.
Doubling Down on Peer Support: iSpace
This spring, in response to the youth community, interACT launched iSpace, a peer support Facebook group exclusively by and for intersex youth 13-29. This type of online space had not previously existed. The group’s 60+ members come from all countries and backgrounds. The space allows youth to discuss issues in their lives that only intersex peers may understand.

Support is necessary for advocacy. This year we also partnered with intersex mental health provider Niki Khanna to provide guided discussion sessions for our interACT Youth members.

Community Education
interACT was there to support intersex youth in spreading awareness in 2018. Surrounding Intersex Awareness Day, Youth members received training and stipends to educate their communities in the U.S. and beyond with our #4intersex campaign resources.

Youth member Erin translated our educational slide deck into Croatian, and his work may be one of the first intersex resources in the language!

Youth Know Best
Communications and program staff teamed up to conduct an extensive climate survey of 30+ youth members in September. The results will inform 2019 planning, and hopefully drive funding for a 2019 youth retreat.

In the past few years, Youth members in their teens and twenties have spread their wings, pursuing independent advocacy projects and even starting organizations in their own countries. Our collective provides support, training, social activities, and a space for these voices to join together.
