Beginning in Bed-Stuy, Talks with Wolves was a one-man enterprise, a store of Indigenous Art and Culture. For 6 years, art sales and local educational programs were key events that addressed challenges. Talks with Wolves expanded services in various communities in NYC by becoming a nonprofit in 2002, TWW Inc.

For 19 years, TWW Inc has focused on art, education, culture, humanities, ethnic awareness, as well as mental health awareness through art therapy. TWW Inc serves socioeconomically challenged NYC youth from kindergarten through high school and their parents through collaborative programming.

TWW Inc's dedication to provide unique programs allow us to establish unique relationships with students, schools, partnership with other educational organizations, teaching artist, parents, and foundations. Your support is the main reason why we are able to continue enhancing the education of youth over the years, and the success of the communities is our success. We promise to serve with increased dedication and commitment for youth to thrive in excellence, values, and integrity.

TWW Inc's journey was accompanied by many challenges. Year after year, hard work, collaboration, and dedication helped maintain ongoing services to the communities in need.

We look forward to the future and invite you to join us in celebrating 25 years of service.

We are thankful to all those who have faith in TWW Inc to assist students to achieve to the best of their abilities. Feedback from educators, parents, and the communities guides us to continue adjusting and strengthening our programs. Our achievement story remains unfinished. We continue to give students the courage, determination, pride, voice, and support to reach their full potential, becoming excellent learners and grow to be exceptional leaders!
