Welcome to StoryBook Theater at Studio East in Kirkland!

When I get to Studio East in Downtown Kirkland, I will park in a parking lot near the theater.
I will walk to the front of the theater, put my mask on, and go through the double doors into the lobby.

I will stop at the front table, meet the box office staff and check to see that my name is on the list. They will also check my vaccine card or negative COVID-19 test.
After I check in, I will either wait in the lobby, use the restroom to the left, get a drink from the drinking fountain or water filter, or go find my seat.

I can go down the stairs or use the ramp to find my seat in the auditorium. I can sit on a chair or a comfy cushion up front.
Before the show starts, the lights will be on, some music will be playing, and there might be noise as other audience members look for their seats.

When the lights get brighter on stage and Kim, the piano player, comes out to say hello, that means the show is about to begin.

Then, the actors will come on stage and tell a story through song and dance.
During the show, there might be some audience participation. I can participate if I want, but I don’t have to. There also might be some clapping. I can clap, or I can cover my ears if it gets too loud.

I can play with my fidget gadgets, put on headphones, or even take a break outside under the covered patio, at Peter Kirk Park, or at the nearby library, until I am ready to come back to the theater.
At the end of the show, the actors will bow, answer a few questions, and wave goodbye.

When I am ready to leave, I will leave the auditorium up the stairs or ramp. It might be a little crowded, but I can take my time. I will walk out Studio East the same way I came in.
