Sound Bite #1
TRT: 41:20	Transcription
	I started training dogs about uuh ever since I was a little kid, I just had a knack of training dogs, and aww I started training about 15 years ago, really training dogs. I did a little house-training dogs, and then I aww, I apprenticed under a guy, really, really knowledgeable guys uum that taught me a lot, how to read the dog, how to understand the dog, the behaviors, the tails, everything about the dog. What they, example and told me to emphasis on their ability. Focus on what they offer you and that's how I can pair dogs with somebody, knowing hey, this dog will be perfect for you, because I watch the person and I watch the dog and see which is a perfect match for them.

	The difference I see in a lot of people with their dogs and their PTSD is the the accomplishment they have with the dog and what they do when they go outside in the world umm they are so secluded in the house they don't want to go anywhere in (inaudible) their their, I think their mind of frame changes with a dog. Because it's a companion all the time. No matter what mood they are in the dogs there for them. And they understand and their by their sides. It's like a comfort zone for these people. And, once they have that comfort zone you see them achieve a lot of things. Umm. The dog, people are able to go out in public.

Interview #2
Name: Sandra La Flamme
Title: CEO and President of the National PTSD Service Association
Sound Bite #1
TRT: 30:03	Transcription
	What inspired me to start the PTSD Service Association with my husband was we wanted to do for others what our service dog has done for us. Changed our life. We had just been married only a couple of days and having that puppy in our life changed the whole trajectory of what our married life has been like, our personal lives. And Mark's understanding of this was so effective for him, he wanted to do it for others. And, I'm with him on that.

	A veteran with PTSD can return to life. It's a leash for life. This dog is not a family dog, it is for a person with a handicap and PTSD is a very real handicap, and it stops that veteran from integrating socially and financially into the business world the way they've been trained in the military or as a first responder. And, we need that in our society. We need all these folks with this amazing training that they received in their occupation as a veteran, as a as a service person or as a first responder so that dog enables him to translate those skills into the things that we need in the business world.
