

Olu Oguibe's Guest of the Month

[http:// www.camwood.org/
guest.htm](http://www.camwood.org/guest.htm)

Cover Girl

In 1994 New York artist Iké Udé exhibited a kiosk of magazine covers at Exit Art in New York. Sitting in his installed environment, Udé simulated a news agent's with racks and a wallfull of magazine displays. In addition to the simulacral nature of this environment, one other thing was

Iké Udé, artist and publisher

Cover Girl

In 1994 New York artist Iké Udé exhibited a kiosk of magazine covers at Exit Art in New York. Sitting in his installed environment, Udé simulated a news agent's with racks and a wallfull of magazine displays. In addition to the simulacral nature of this environment, one other thing was peculiar with Udé's magazines; on most of the covers there was one central image, that of the artist himself. There was Vogue and Elle and Cosmopolitan and even Town and Country, and on most of these the artist consciously imposed his face; carefully groomed and made-up, pose meticulously chosen, studio photograph shot with professional care and the result retouched where and as necessary with the intent to produce the perfect object of desire. In Cover Girl Udé moved from consumer to become the consumed, and on each cover he seemed to say: how d'ya like me now?

