Food Safety & Quality

At Culinary International, food safety is our primary focus. We strive to exceed the industry's highest benchmarks for safety and quality, such as:

USDA — enhancing food safety through steps to reduce the occurrence of food borne hazards from farm to table.

HACCP — nationally recognized food safety management program that facilitates control in all aspects of commercial food production from acquiring and handling raw materials to producing and distributing the finished product.

QAI Certified Organic — a leading USDA-accredited organic product certifying agency committed to ensuring organic integrity at every link in the organic production chain.

SQF Level 2 Certification — SQF is recognized as the worldwide standard in food safety and quality. Culinary International's level 2 certification signifies its commitment to the highest standards of food safety and quality. SQF's level 2 certification program is GFSI compliant, which means that Culinary International meets the stringent GFSI requirements.

Non-GMO — consumer awareness of genetically modified organisms (GMO) used in food manufacturing has created a market for sales of non-GMO manufactured products. With its non-GMO certification, Culinary International is well-suited to offer this certification to those customers offering products for that market.

Gluten-Free — gluten-free products are emerging as a strong category of specialty foods directed to those consumers requiring a gluten-free diet. Culinary International has invested in gluten-free certification to enable its customers to effectively compete in this fast growing market segment.
