Technics
by Panasonic

T-90 or T-100: It's 20" high, but this little giant will take on a full orchestra. It delivers crisp, clean highs and full bass even with amplifiers of modest power. It's highly efficient, yet it will handle 150 watt musical bursts. By all means, come in and hear it.

List $80 ea. NOW $48 ea.

T-200A: Slightly bigger than the T-100, you'll hear an even bigger sound. Astonishingly deep bass. Excellent definition even in complex musical passages. An overall sound that's accurate and neutral, so you can enjoy everything from rock to classical music without a disturbing sense of "coloration".

List $99⁹⁵ ea. NOW $61 ea.

Man In The Street

Dispersing Black Neighborhood Schools

Since the beginning of the school term back in the fall of 1976 the cry against busing has died down considerably in the white community.

However, some blacks who accepted busing and intergration as a means of giving their children a better education are now wondering why the all-black schools were closed instead of being brought academically up to par with the white schools.

This week the "man in the street" asked citizens if they felt the neighborhood school concept should be brought back into being.

Here is how a number of them responded.

Robert Davis replied, "I work for the school system and I think the schools should have been integrated long before they were. I don't think things should be changed now just when integration is beginning to work. There are still a few hard heads on both sides but I think integration is working fine and black students are learning more."

Ruth Young answered, "I don't feel its justifiable to bus younger kids miles away from home when they have schools in their own community. I think the schools should be revamped to make all of them equal and the neighborhood school system reinstated."

Walter Hauser commented, "I would favor the neighborhood school system, if all schools were equal. I view busing as a means of achieving equal education. I don't see anything wrong with it. I was bussed to maintain segregation."

Doris McMurray remarked, "I feel children should go to the school nearest them. They shouldn't have to be bused to a school ten or fifteen miles away. Of course all schools should have been made equal to begin with instead of being integrated."

Cheryl Scales said, "I prefer the freedom of choice system but I realize the educational opportunities are superior at white schools. I do feel however, that if all schools were equal that students would learn more in neighborhood schools."

David Hariss responded, "If every school had the same quality of educators I'd prefer my children attending the school closest to home but I want my children to go where they can get the best education, and the best schools are the white schools because thats where the money is put."

Latha Nails stated, "I prefer the neighborhood school system. I think the teachers should be integrated instead of the students. The white schools are better because they get more funds. If the money spent on busing had been spent to upgrade the black schools the community school system would have worked."

The majority of persons asked said they would prefer the reinstatement of the neighborhood school concept but only if all schools were on the same academic level.
